(One minute interview with Charlie Grimm: "Funniest thing I saw all spring was in Tampa....Ernie Lombardi and Jim Weaver of the Reds were sick....They were in the same room....I went up to visit them, but all I could see was Lombardi's schnozzle sticking out from under the covers on one bed and Weaver's feet from the other."

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

The old cry of "sailor beware" has turned to that of "sailor prepare," at least that seems the motto of President Maurice Callaghan now that spring has apparently arrived to stay. Several owners of punts have have been busy this spring replacing old rigging and adding paint jobs to their craft in anticipation of another successful sailing season in the Bay of Quinte waters. President Callaghan intends to call a meeting of the Belleville Yacht Club in the near future and according to off-season reports several new craft will compete in the Yacht Club's weekly sailing races this year. However, it has been brought to our attention that weekly races are somewhat too frequent for the convenience of some of the puntsters. "If I want a half holiday some Wednesday I can't afford to miss a race as I will lose points, but if the races were held alternate Wednesday and Sundays, that is once every ten days, then one could arrange the odd half holiday for the amusement of our families," suggested one sailor recently. Incidentally the Yacht Club sailors expect renewed interest in aquatics this season, due to the American Power Boat races being staged locally.

Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Only last week the Belleville Golf trundlers were crowned champion bowlers of all they viewed in Belleville, winning the major league finals at the Recreation Alleys by eliminating the Deacon Sportswear quintette. However, it seems there are other major league "quints" who feel they are as good or maybe a little better than the present titlists, we refer to Walt Baker's "shoe-menders." It seems the "sole-preservers" (not soul-preservers, Mister Compositor) played the champion Golfers rather even all through the major league schedule and now Mrs. Baker's little boy Walt feels his charges have been "done dirt by our little Nell" (Nell of course being the Belleville Golfers). However, we now find the "shoemakers" having challenged the champs to a sudden death match, with the old "put up or shut up" adage coming into the picture. Of course the "divot-diggers" accepted the challenge hurled and some large amounts of the coin of the realm will doubtless change hands during this grudge bowling match.

No less than 49 teen-aged kids answered the initial call for junior softball practice at the Collegiate grounds last night. Just how Skipper "Red" Townsend kept track of his brood was one of the questions of the night, but there is little doubt as to the earnestness of the aspiring kids, who went to work with gusto. After looking over Red's material we can broadcast a warning to the other softball squads of the local loop—"don't sell these kids short." Tonight the "Tiremen" practice at the Collegiate and tomorrow night will find "Chuck" Barnett's Corbys crowd taking to the diamond at Queen Mary School grounds. In both cases aspiring players are invited to work out with these clubs. While on the subject of softball the executive of the Belleville Softball loop met last night and adopted a 30 game schedule. Considerable business was completed, which included the appointing of Ken Edgecombe, executive member, in charge of all umpires. Ken, a past president in local softball circles, knows all the questions and also the answers in this respect.

Following invitations and appeals to the R.C.A.F., that fell on deaf ears, Secretary Harry Knott officially announced that the "Flyers" would not be included in the Belleville softball set-up in 1939. Communications were made by the executive with Air Force sports heads, who openly stated the Flyers were not interested in playing softball in Belleville this year. "We have a surplus of players at the Air Station and already have entered a team in the Trenton League. However, arrangements to play inter-unit softball on the aerodrome are being mooted to take care of our surplus players," it was announced from the Air Base. However, we did learn that baseball is being considered by the "Airmen" and efforts to include them in the Bay of Quinte League were made yesterday. A meeting of the R.C.A.F. Sports Club will be held Thursday at which time the matter will be officially advanced. Last year, however, the Flyers flatly refused a berth in the Quinte loop, it being felt they were not strong enough to compete, but since that date a large contingent of Airmen from Western Canada has arrived at the Trenton Air Station, many of whom are recognized ballsters. The inclusion of the Flyers into the Quinte league would assure a strong group and doubtless tend to stimulate interest in the game.

Did You Know—36 runs were scored in the Baltimore-Toronto game yesterday?....The Orioles scored 25 of 'em....Selkirk got three hits in four tries. Rosen continued to hit with regularity, Heath got a bingle and Karakauskas was chalked up with a defeat to account for Canada's efforts in the major leagues yesterday...Krakky" is still in possession of his wildness, he walked ten yesterday and lost an overtime tussle 6-3 to the Red Sox, although the Senators outhit the 'big moneyed team' ten to nine....Taking into consideration the Port Arthur Bear Cats won the Allan Cup with a purely home brew team adds to their prowess, the 'Cats line-up was composed of players from either Port William of Port Arthur, only two coming from the Port.....Picton intermediates appointed Roly Rorke, veteran infielder, as manager and coach to be assisted by the inimitable Ron Church....The Picton club not only has a good live-wire executive, but prospects for a good ball club.

Babe Ruth returns to the diamond in a softball game at the Garden May 9.....Nice little $50,000 consolation prize for Joe Louis had been posted in a Los Angeles bank just in case Jack Roper had upset the apple cart last week....Dominic DiMaggio, youngest of the ball playing brothers, is getting rave notices up and down the Pacific Coast for his work in the San Francisco outfield....When Narragansett Park threw open its gates the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram chirped: "Sucker season opens today".

The Stars Say

For Thursday, April 27
By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

UNUSUAL activity, probably with disturbance and excitement, is the augury for this day, based on leading astral operations. A static or crystalized condition of long standing may be suddenly and decisively broken up under a subtle or intriguing mode of action. This may emanate from an obscure or mysterious source, although the element of the sinister, nefarious or harmful is lacking. Decide on change and deal with strangers cautiously.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a year notable for the rather abrupt breaking up of old, static conditions, making way for decided benefits, if change and readjustments are not too radical. Advise with elders or others with whom friendly agreements, collusion or secrecy may be of benefit.

A child born on this day may be studious, serious, and self-sufficient, although probably erratic or peculiar in some of its ways. The latter trait might be due to inventive genius or originality of thought and conduct.

PARTIAL APPROVAL

Careful Consideration

Mr. Hipel said there was at present before the House of Commons a proposal to amend the criminal code which would provide penalties along lines similar to those proposed in Mr. Croll's bill.

The government, said Mr. Hipel, had given careful consideration to the proposed legislation and he had interviewed labor men regarding it. Some opposed the bill as it stands, although approving it in principle.

Suggested changes included the insertion of a clause whereby employees might be dismissed for "just cause" and another to prevent organization of unions during working hours. These amendments, whoever, might be discussed when the bill reached committee stage.

Hunter Objects

Fraser Hunter (Lib. Toronto—St. Patrick) enlivened the debate after Mr. Croll had explained his proposals. He objected strenuously to the bill's definition of trade unions as any association of employees "which is free from undue influence, domination, restraint or interference by employers or associations of employers."

This, he declared, was "dynamite and pure revolution," it allowed for "anyone with a grouse—a bad citizen" to stir up trouble and "to bring revolution to this country." It was a definition "inserted by some Bolshevist lawyers" and was "pure Bolshevism."

Mr. Hunter demanded instead that trade unions be defined according to British traditions as groups of workmen banded together according to their trades. He said he didn't care, in making his remarks, whether labor liked them or not.

"Labor doesn't vote as labor. It votes as individuals, just the same as Scotsmen or Jews. I don't care a tuppence about what labor thinks of what I have to say."

Don't Want 'Wagner Act'

Canadian labor should "first put its own house in order" before it expected to benefit under such legislation, he said. Ontario didn't want any "Wagner Act, like these poor fish over there," he added in reference to United States legislation.

As for the principle of the bill, Mr. Hunter supported it "2,000 per cent.," but the House should "can it for certain" if the definition of a trade union were not changed.

Mr. Hipel assured the Toronto member this would be considered in committee.

A. W. Roebuck (Lib. Toronto-Bellwoods) supported the bill "in its entirety" and reviewed his support of and interest in the cause of labor. J. P. MacKay (Lib. Hamilton East) supported the bill in principle only.

Mr. Croll explained his measure.

Assures Right

In his words, "the bill assures the right of all men to form a union and the right to join a union of their own choice, if they are threatened by an employer, this bill penalizes the employer. It doesn't force anyone to join a Union, nor does it force the employer to bargain with his employees."

He said the principle at stake was not the attitude toward Unions, but the attitude toward Democratic rights.

Premier Hepburn: "What is to prevent any man from joining a Union at present?"

Mr. Croll produced the rules of a Toronto company which he did not name and which he said prevented Union activities.

The Premier said he meant a "legal" bar. Mr. Croll admitted that in theory there was no bar, "but in practice it doesn't work out that way."

He spoke of Ontario as a great industrial centre and said every other province but Prince Edward Island had legislation similar to that he sponsored for Ontario.

Mr. Croll referred to minimum wage legislation on the Provincial statute books since 1921. It worked in the case of women as "moral legislation" to have women from being forced "to walk the streets for the week's rent." But, in the case of Minimum Wage Act of 1937 for men, it had not worked, as it was based on "plain justice."

Legislation Protects

The "little fellow getting $8 a week" was too weak to organize and demand his rights and this bill protected him in such organization.

His proposal, Mr. Croll said, should not be considered "another Wagner Act," but differed from the United States legislation in that it did not force employers to bargain collectively nor to compel the company Union and the vote in the shop.

Mr. Croll denied any suggestion the bill would give the Committee of Industrial Organizations "the right to invade Canada." Instead, it would "help to weld labor groups" in Ontario. It would prove an aid rather than a menace to business generally and would help the worker keep his self respect.

Premier Hepburn recalled the automobile strikes of 1937 and how he "took my political life in my hands" by opposing the C.I.O. He reviewed his government's legislation for Mother's Allowances, Old Age Pensions, Unemployment Relief and medical care.

Against ('Sit Downers')

With this record of social legislation, he asked whether it was to be thought the government would not support "illegal Unions."

"I want to say that if a sit-down strike occurred in Ontario tomorrow the whole resources of the Province would be thrown against it," the Premier declared.

"I'm going to maintain law and order of this Province if it is the last thing I do."

Mr. Hepburn enunciated his policy as being favorable to proper labor Unions, but always reserving the right of persons to work who wished to work.

Proposal Rejected

A second measure proposed by Mr. Croll to insure all workers two weeks holidays annually with pay was rejected by the government with the support of Conservative Leader Drew.

Premier Hepburn read a newspaper report from Quebec City saying Quebec was preparing to follow Ontario's lead in preparing legislation to implement any Dominion scheme for unemployment insurance.

"I believe the influence of the two great industrial provinces—Ontario and Quebec—will cause the Dominion Government to bring in an unemployment insurance scheme," the Premier said. "I believe the majority of the people of Canada are waiting for a Federal scheme."

In the closing hours of the late session, which the government believed necessary if prorogation was to be made this week, 13 government bills were put through committee stage and now stand for final reading.

Charges some relief administrators have become "actively identified with the Grit party" were voiced by Leopold Macaulay (Con. York South) who mentioned one particular administrator in York East.

Will Investigate Charges

"When they are dishing out food and clothing they ought to get out of politics," Mr. Macaulay declared and the government benches agreed. Hon. Eric Cross, Minister of Welfare, promised to investigate the specific charge.

Announcement was made earlier by Highways Minister McQuesten that the proposed new bridge at Niagara Falls would be built this year at a cost of $4,250,000 and would be a toll structure until it paid for itself. He did not say what the toll would be.

"If you don't build it any cheaper than the one at Sarnia our grandchildren aren't going to go free over this bridge," Leopold Macaulay (Con. York South) commented.

Under Conservative Leader George Drew, the Opposition put up a spirited but losing fight against one section of Mr. McQuesten's Highway Improvement Act which went through committee stage and stands for second reading.

Prompted by Judgment

This section was prompted by a recent judgment of Chief Justice R. S. Robertson of the Ontario Supreme Court, holding Wentworth County liable for $25,000 damages for death of a child and injury to two other persons due to the inadequacy of a guard rail on a county road.

Under the amended act, no action may be brought against the Highways Department for damages "caused by the presence or absence or insufficiency" of guard rails or "on account of any construction, obstruction or erection or any situation, arrangement or disposition of any earth, rock, tree or other material" along the traveled portion of the highway.

Mr. Drew and Mr. Macaulay were joined by other Conservatives in their opposition to what they termed an abrogation of individual rights. A. W. Roebuck (Lib. Toronto Bellwood) went even further:

"Let's pass a law saying the individual has no rights whatsoever." He moved the striking out of the whole section.

Section is Defended

Premier Hepburn defended the section, declaring Ontario was passing through a transition period as to motor traffic and was "no longer in the horse and buggy days." People were driving faster and moving faster in all ways.

He and Mr. McQuesten both argued the Province should not be expected to put up guard rails strong enough to stop heavy trucks travelling at high speed. Most guard rails, said the Highway Minister, might not be strong enough "to stop a perambulator, for all I know."

Mr. McQuesten announced No. Seven Highway from Sarnia to the Quebec boundary and from Toronto to Barrie would be regarded as "direct mileage" roads. Following practice in England the Department intended to discourage small business places, like hot dog stands, from sprouting up on these higher speed roads as they tended to slow down and clog traffic.

Saturday Night

By KARIN C. ASBRAND

"If I were a husband like you and had a wife like me, I'd bring her home something Saturday nights."

From a three-year acquired force of habit, Homer's arm slid promptly about Ottilie's waist, as she perched on the arm of his chair, but he did not take his eyes off the evening news, nor his teeth of his pipe.

"And what, pray," he parried "haven't you got that I would bring you home on Saturday nights?"

"Oh," she hesitated, "just things. Surprises! Things that I'd like to have but am not really looking for. Stanley always brings Stella home something.

"Easter," went on Ottilie relentlessly, "Stanley brought her a big bunch of violets that Saturday night, and they were $4 a bunch. Little things like that mean a lot."

"Sure they do," Homer snorted. "They mean eating spare ribs and rice for your Easter dinner. I paid $4 for the duck we had for dinner that Sunday."

Try and argue with a man like Homer! Ottilie's pretty curved lips straightened into a line of determination. She would show him a thing or two!

She joined a bridge club, and got a "big kick" out of going home late once in a while and letting Homer wait for the dinner. She joined the Ladies' guild at the church, and was tireless in well-doing.

Homer was swamped with work. He took to staying late at the office. Even on Saturdays it seemed as though he never got through.

Everybody in the office was harassed and worried with work except the new junior sales manager, who had been there only a month, and who did not hesitate to let everybody know he was very much in love. Nothing worried him, except his appearance.

He paused at Homer's desk one Saturday on his way out from the office. His round young face beamed. It was spring, and he was overwhelmed with the thrill of love and life. He counted out his pay, folding it into three different envelopes.

"One," he enumerated, "for living, two for violets, theatres, candy, and three for savings. She's a great old girl for violets."

Violets! The word squeezed itself into Homer's work-benumbed brain. Violets!

"What's the fair lady's name, old man?" he asked.

"Ottilie—"

Homer sprang up like a madman. "Get out of here, or I'll kill you," he threatened.

The ardent wooer scurried.

Homer put his things away. No work for him that afternoon. So that was her little game. She had probably just been waiting for him to find it out. He would show them up, both of them. Heap coals of fire on her head. He dashed to the florist's to purchase the biggest bunch of violets on display, then to Polly Pelham's for chocolates. Next, the roadster for home. He sneaked into the house like a thief, intent on surprising them together.

A stifled sob reached his ears. It came from the living room. He tiptoed in, a rather ludicrous figure, hat and tie awry, a flower box under one arm, and the chocolates under the other. Ottilie, alone, curled up on the davenport wept tears of loneliness.

"So," he began vehemently. "I scared him, did I?"

Ottilie raised a tear-stained face. "Who, Homer? What are you talking about? Oooch! Flowers! Candy! What're you celebrating?"

"Seeing you get them every Saturday night," this more vehemently, "when I'm working like a fool to get you the bare necessities of life—"

"Why, Homer, I haven't gotten a violet since long before we were married."

"Do you mean to tell me that that young Bob Morrison doesn't bring you violets or something every Saturday night?"

Ottilie laughed.

"Poor, deluded boy," she cried, rocking back and forth in her mirth. "He's going with my cousin, Ottilie. My little namesake. How stupid of you not to think of her. She called me up this afternoon to tell me that if he dared to propose again she'd have to accept."

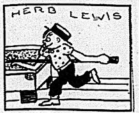
Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was sewing on her sewing machine and I wasn't aloud out because it was poring rain, and the telefone rang and I answered it and it was Mrs. Hews wanting to talk to ma, and ma went, saying, Hello, Hello Maud, what? No, I haven't heard from her all week, O she did, of all things, she's getting to be a downright boar with her tickets for this and her tickets for that. I have nothing to say against charity, but even a nail can be driven too far. How long ago did she call you? O is that so, and I'm next on her list, am I? Then if the phone rings within the next few minutes I'll know what to do, and that's let it ring, thanks for the warning, Maud, good bye.

And she hadn't hardly hung up when the phone rang again, ma saying, Ring out yee bells, a hint in time is worth 9 points of the law.

And she kept on sewing and laughing to herself and the phone rang about 15 minutes without stopping, and after a while pop came home, saying to ma, O, you're back, where were you downtown? and ma said, What do you mean, I wasn't anywhere, I haven't stirred hand or foot out of the house.



Then by gollies the telephone company is going to hear plenty from me, what service pop said, and I said, Well G roozlem, pop, and ma said, Now Benny please dont interrupt till your father finishes, or any other time.

I tried to get you for a half an hour, pop said, I wanted to bring Herb Lewis home to dinner. Can the phone service be as bad as that or were you taking a nap? he said, and ma said, I cant say I was.

Can you say you weren't? pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum dont make a fuss, it's all for the best, you know I never liked that pool playing Herb Lewis, and now there's no Herb Lewis and no tickets, and pop said, What the dooce have tickets got to do with it? and ma said, Oh, you wouldn't understand, let's have dinner.

Wich we did.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Apr. 26 (AP)—A rise in copper shares and a wide jump in Eastman Kodak gave the stock market an upward slant today after an early decline. Prices stiffened all around but minor net losses still were mixed with the gains near the final hour.

Trading, while more active on the upside, continued small on the whole as speculators awaited the Hitler speech Friday. Transactions were about 500,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 26.— (CP)—Moderate weakness was displayed on Toronto Exchange today. Base Metal stocks were the weakest. Trading totalled 216,000 shares.

Mining shares improved their price tone in the early afternoon, in harmony with a pick-up in New York. Nickel and Noranda recovered most of their early losses. Hollinger, Lake Shore and Wright-Hargreaves were mildly weak and secondary golds were off a few cents. Shares of Paulkenham Lake Gold Mines have been delisted at the company's request.

Steels, Utilities and Foods showed weakness. Western Oils were a cent or two down.

SEIZE VEHICLE

Ontario Legislature in committee last night during a sitting that lasted until 3 a.m.

The Act was amended to provide for impounding of cars on 11 new grounds. Autos must be impounded for a first conviction for driving while the licence or motor vehicle permit is under suspension by the Minister of Highways or by a magistrate; for operating or being in charge of a motor vehicle while intoxicated; and for driving while prohibited under the Criminal Code following conviction for reckless driving while the driver's licence is under suspension.

In addition the car must be seized and held for three months upon a second conviction for failing to remain at the scene of an accident, and for a third conviction for any one of the following offences: Operating an unregistered motor vehicle, driving without a chauffeur's licence, careless driving, racing, driving while under age, or driving without an operator's licence.

Under the present law it is compulsory for magistrates to impound the cars of drivers convicted for drunk driving where the car is registered in the name of any member of the family.

Amends Section

G. C. Elgie (Con. Toronto-Woodbine) objected to impound of cars when driven by dependent children and registered in the name of the father, and after other members had voiced similar objection Premier Hepburn indicated his willingness to amend the section.

"This idea that children should have the right to take out a potentially dangerous vehicle without responsibility on the part of the parent is unsound," Conservative Leader George Drew said. "To my mind this provision strikes at the very root of the trouble in making parents shoulder more responsibility. A great number of accidents are caused by young drivers."

Attorney-General Conant and Highways Minister McQuesten endorsed the Opposition leader's views and the section was passed without alteration.

CONSCRIPTION MAY CAUSE MANY TO RETURN TO BRITAIN

Former Old Country residents now residing in Belleville and unable to find steady employment are watching events in England carefully the past few days, and have been particularly interested in the announcement today regarding conscription in the British Isles. It is believed by some that this new law may provide employment for older workers due to the fact that many younger workers may be liberated from their jobs to serve their allotted time in the reserve forces. If this is the case, it is expected that a veritable exodus of willing workers will take place from Canada back to the British Isles.

LARGE FISHING BOAT FIRST INTO HARBOR

First power boat of the season to enter Belleville harbor was gassed at the Imperial Oil Company docks late yesterday afternoon. The large fishing boat was owned by M. McDonald of Point Anne, and delivered the first shipment of fish by water to the local wholesale house of Black and Son.

MASSASSAGA TRAPPER GETS MINK IN TRAP

A handsome full-grown mink, said to be somewhat of a rarity in this district, was caught in a muskrat trap belonging to Arthur Valleau, Massassaga trapper the other day. The mink had apparently been preying on live muskrats and ruining those already caught in the traps. It resembled a weasel to some extent, but was larger and bore a much more valuable pelt.

TO PROROGUE FRIDAY

Toronto, Apr. 25 (CP)—The Ontario Legislature will prorogue Friday, Provincial Secretary H. C. Nixon said today.

"We are going to sit right through tonight," Mr. Nixon said. "We plan to clean up everything by tomorrow night and have formal prorogation on Friday."

MEASURE TO BE INTRODUCED

TO SIMPLIFY MOBILIZATION.

British evoys in Berlin and Rome had informed the German and Italian governments that Britain was adopting conscription "as a purely defensive measure because of the alarming developments on the continent," the Prime Minister told the House.

The Prime Minister also disclosed that the government will introduce legislation to simplify the procedure of mobilization, empowering the government to authorize the various service departments to call up any class of reserve or auxiliary force. At present, this must be done by the King's proclamation declaring a "state of emergency exists".

If war breaks out, Mr. Chamberlain stated, legislation will be enacted "which would impose special penalties on profiteering and which would provide that any increases of profit or increases of individual wealth should be appropriately curtailed to the benefit of the state".

Explaining the reasons for the government's conscription move, Mr. Chamberlain said consideration had been given to Britain's new liabilities incurred through her territorial guarantees in southeastern Europe. The object of this policy "is not to wage war but to prevent it", the Prime Minister declared.

Mr. Chamberlain continued:

"Bearing this object in mind, we can not but be impressed with the view shared by other democratic countries and especially by our friends in Europe that despite the immense efforts this country already has made by way of rearmament, nothing would so impress the world with the determination of this country to offer firm resistance to any attempt at general domination as its acceptance of the principle of compulsory military service, which is the universal rule on the continent."

It has been generally understood that conscription would be applied at the outset of a war and the Prime Minister had declared several times in the past his opposition to peacetime conscription. In this regard he said:

"We are not at war now but when every country is straining all its resources to be ready for war, when confidence in the maintenance of peace is beind undermined and everyone knows that if war were to come we might pass into it in a matter, not of weeks, but of hours, no one can pretend that this is peace time in any sense in which the term can be fairly used."

Reinforce Anti-Aircraft Defences.

Under the bill dealing with mobilization, the Prime Minister said: "It will be necessary to call up certain territorial and non-regular air force personnel to reinforce our system of anti-aircraft defence throughout the period of uneasiness which may last a considerable time yet."

The Prime Minister hoped compulsory military training would be of a temporary nature. The scheme will last for three years but it could be ended or extended during that time.

The voluntary system will continue as the basis for the three defence services as well as all branches of civil defence.

"Acceleration and expansion of our rearmament program, increase in the strength of the territorial army, the decision to establish a ministry of supply with the power to secure the priority for government orders and now the proposal for compulsory training all have been designed with one single object, namely to render this country able to carry out the engagements it has entered into in the belief that in that way the peace of Europe can best be secured."

Pledge Broken Says Attlee.

The Prime Minister's statement raised vociferous protest from the Labor benches. Clement Attlee, opposition leader, accused Mr. Chamberlain of breaking the "solemn pledge" given four weeks ago to rely on the voluntary system of recruiting for military service.

The Labor leader predicted the government's policy would increase the widespread distrust of the Prime Minister and "instead of solidifying the country will create a division and imperil the national effort."

When the Prime Minister rose to reply he was greeted by continual shouts and taunts from the Labor benches. He said he had been quite prepared to be faced with the accusation that his pledge had been broken "but my own conscience is quite clear".

A Labor back bencher shouted: "It must be made of rubber".

Labor To Fight Bill.

The Labor Party served notice that it will fight the bill line by line, which may produce the biggest political fight Great Britain has seen in recent years. There is no doubt the conscription bill will pass, but only after a prolonged debate.

Men called up will not be liable to be sent overseas for garrison service unless there is war, in which case everybody would be on the same footing.

The government admits there will be difficulty equipping the conscript army but men will be called up when equipment is ready for them.

Conscripts For Air Defence.

A proportion of the conscripts will be allocated to the anti-aircraft divisions of the territorial army so that every anti-aircraft gun searchlight will be manned 24 hours a day during the current period of international strain.

The age limit was said by a semi-official spokesman to be somewhat elastic. It was explained that some men may be allowed to train before they are 20 years old if it is more convenient for them. It was noted that Mr. Chamberlain used the words "between 20 and 21".

The conscription will apply to all British subjects domiciled in the United Kingdom.

Experts advised the government to call up the class of men "between 20 and 21" as that would interfere less with normal industrial and educational life than any other age group.

Conscription Speech In Lords.

Earl Stanhope, in the House of Lords, made a statement similar to Mr. Chamberlain's on conscription.

After stating that Britain would be ready to take part in a discussion with the German government with a view to seeking a general settlement, the Prime Minister elaborated on the question.

GOV'T BASIS

Ottawa, April 26 (CP)—The imminence of another European crisis is clearly shown by today's announcement Great Britain is inaugurating conscription for peacetime military service, said J. S. Woodsworth, Co-operative Commonwealth Federation leader.

"This departure from traditional British policy is very significant," he said. "In the nature of modern warfare, conscription is almost inevitable in any country engaging in it. The democracies will have to meet the dictatorships in preparing for emergencies.

"There is a tendency to put economic machinery at the disposal of the state and the next step will be to take over part of this machinery."

In the light of the British development, recent statements by Prime Minister Mackenzie King and Conservative Leader Manion opposing conscription in Canada in the event of war were "not worth a hoot," said Mr. Woodsworth. The statements probably were sincere but would have to be revised in the face of events.

ICE STILL COVERS NORTHERN LAKES

Heavy ice of the northern lakes is slowly yielding to the rays of the warm sun and milder weather of the past week. This week first signs of a breakup of the ice of Moira Lake were observed by city truck and transport drivers using the Madoc highway. Other northern lakes however, have yet to show the first open water, it is stated by Edgar Stapley, proprietor of the Belleville-Bancroft bus line.

First repair work on the stretch of road between Millbridge and Madoc was commenced this week, and except for this section of road, the highway to Bancroft is in fair shape, it is reported.

Tighten Regulations For Enumeration Of Voters' Lists

Toronto, April 26 (CP)—Ontario's Department of Municipal Affairs today prepared to tighten regulations for the enumeration of voters in Provincial and Municipal elections. Earlier in the week an amendment to the Voters' Lists Act which would have compelled municipal clerks to make special enumeration was withdrawn from a bill before the Legislature.

At that time members expressed the opinion the amendment was directed particularly toward alleged malpractice in Toronto. It would have required each municipal clerk to make annually "by house to house canvass or other sufficient inquiry" a correct list of all persons entitled to vote at Provincial or Municipal elections.

Opposition arose from members of smaller cities like Peterborough where, it was stated, unnecessary expense would be entailed.

The Department, according to Queens Park sources, is now working out a proposal whereby municipal assessors who at present compile Voters' Lists would give this job closer attention, without making necessary a special enumeration. A measure covering the proposal is expected at the next session.

SETTLEMENT EFFECTED

Cornwall, Ont., Apr. 26 (CP) — Proposals of Courtaulds (Canada) Limited to the Rayon Workers' Union in regard to the seniority rule during layoffs in slack periods were practically all accepted at union meetings last night and early this morning. A meeting of company officials and the Union negotiating committee is to be held this afternoon, and Union heads are confident a complete settlement will be effected.

Retail Merchants' Association Decides to Close on May 24 Only

No Other Holiday That Week Say Local Retailers

USE OF COLORED LIGHTS

"The Twenty-Fourth of May is the Queen's Birthday, If you don't give us a holiday we'll all run away"—so ran the old school rhyme and Belleville Retail Merchants believe it still holds good for they have decided to hold Wednesday, May 24th as a holiday as usual, despite announcements from Ottawa suggesting a Saturday or Monday holiday on account of the Royal Visit and the presence of Their Majesties in Ottawa on those days.

Belleville Retail Merchants' Association met in Dickens' Coffee Shop Tuesday evening, the first meeting of the spring season, with a representative attendance. Vice President Wm. Anderson occupied the chair, in the absence of President Bruce Lattimer, who was out of the city. A full program of business was transacted and the meeting was both interesting and valuable.

In the matter of public holidays as affected by the Royal Visit, after a thorough discussion, it was decided to observe May 24, as usual, as a holiday, closing the stores on that day, but no other holiday that week.

A new member, Elgin Ford, manager of the Walker Store, here, succeeding Harold Newby, was introduced.

Ask Colored Lights Be Lighted

City Council will be requested to turn on the colored street lights in the business section during the week of the Royal Visit, and continue the same through June, July and August. A committee was appointed to confer with Alderman Harry Rollins, Chairman of the Light Committee of the City Council, on this matter.

Bandmaster Fred Jobson addressed the gathering expressing thanks for co-operation with the band in the Sunday evening concerts which had proved so successful. It was proposed to hold two more, and to have a series of open-air concerts in Victoria Park this summer in the middle of the week.

Goodwill Cavalcade of Chamber

John McIntosh Past President of the Chamber of Commerce, explained the Belleville Cavalcade of Good Will and Friendship, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, which will visit Tweed, Marmora, Madoc, Stirling, Picton and other places during the summer and fall, beginning with Tweed where the Belleville party will be shown the points of interest, the mines, and lakes, etc., the program winding up with a banquet in the evening. Lieut. Fred Jobson will have a symphony band accompany the party, and the program promises to be very entertaining.

Parking Issue Up Again

A number of reported grievances were discussed including one from the Rawson Bus Line regarding the traffic conditions on Front Street on Saturdays which create danger of accident. This brought up the old vexed question of parallel and angle parking again. It was pointed out if a return was made to parallel parking, forty per cent of parking space on the street would be lost, and the present system seemed satisfactory to those who used the street for parking purposes.

Clean Up and Paint Up

Clean Up, Paint Up Week, sponsored by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, was endorsed by the meeting.

Various other matters of interest to the business men of Belleville particularly and all citizens in general were discussed and appropriate action taken.

Produce Unchanged On Toronto Market

Toronto, April 26. —Generally steady prices ruled for all lines on yesterday's session of the Toronto open produce market, according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Trading showed a fair pace on the butter market, and, while receipts were slow in moving at some points offerings appeared to be clearing. Buying was on a hand to mouth basis, but receipts were not heavy. Ontario creamery solids remained at 20 3-4c for No. 1 grades and 20c for 38 score. Regraded lots turned over at 1-4c per pound discount.

Offerings were reported to be ample for demand on the egg market, although some shipments were still being diverted to Montreal. Graded eggs closed out the day at 21c for grade A-large, 19 1-2c for medium, 18 1-2c for pullets and B's and 18c for C grades. Storing operations are progressing and storage packs were quoted at 1c per dozen premium.

Montreal, April 26.—(CP)—Steady to narrowly firmer prices ruled in quiet trading on open produce markets here yesterday, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Creamery butter prints to retailers sold for 22 1-2c a pound and solids for 22.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold at 22 1-2c to 23c a dozen for A-large, 20 1-2c to 21c for A-medium, 19 1-2c for A-pullets, 20c for B-large and 18 1-2c to 19c for C. Receipts 2,686 cases.

Kiwanis Playgrounds' Equipment Turned Over To Board of Education

The Kiwanis Club will revert to the Board of Education all the equipment in the two playgrounds and retire from the active management and supervision of these playgrounds by a vote taken of the members at the weekly luncheon held in Queens Hotel on Tuesday with Dr. R. A. "Dick" Flynn in the chair. This has been a contentious question in the club for some time and the matter has been discussed pro and con on several occasions but there was no discussion on the question on Tuesday.

The president of the club was delegated to attend the International convention of Kiwanis to be held at Boston this coming June and all expenses will be paid by the local club. Mrs. Flynn will accompany her husband to this convention and it is likely that another member and his wife will also make the journey. The club welcomed back an old member in the person of Bruce Bottum. He was introduced to the Club by Eddie Logan but the member needed little introduction as he has been identified with service clubs in the city for some time and only retired on account of his business keeping him away from noonday luncheons.

Despite the fact there was no principal speaker, the members enjoyed a fine musical program arranged by Leo B. Riggs. A clarinet quartette from the Collegiate band entertained with two selections while Ted Green gave two solos on the Vibra Harp. All numbers were enthusiastically received. Leo also arranged a musical competition and the members remembered the old time tunes. There were thirty-nine numbers to identify and Sid Howell identified thirty-one a most commendable average. The community singing was directed by Jack McIntosh while Ted Hughes collected the several fines imposed.

BARBER HELD FOR MANSLAUGHTER

Harry McKenzie, Toronto, Held Responsible for Woman's Death

Toronto, Apr. 26 (CP) — Harry McKenzie, a barber, was held responsible for the death of Miss Catherine Deadey by a coroner's jury following an inquest which ended early today. Miss Deadey died as a result of an illegal operation, medical evidence showed. Following her death McKenzie was charged with manslaughter. Miss Margaret Elliott and Arthur Hayward were named by the jury as contributing "to the circumstances that eventually resulted in the performance of this criminal act".

Police Blotter

Reported stolen yesterday, a tricycle, the property of Earl Ashley, 21 North Front St., was found abandoned on north Pinnacle St. early today. The "trike" was taken to the police station by a small lad, who gave his name as Sanford. Later the tricycle was returned to Mr. Ashley.

Early last evening considerable property damage resulted to a motor car driven by Arthur Tapp, R.R. No. 8, Belleville, during a rear end motor accident.

A truck driven by Lester Bell, R.R. No. 4, Belleville was proceeding west on Moira Street and was forced to stop abruptly in order to avoid running over a dog, that darted out from the curb in front of the heavy vehicle. As Mr. Bell applied the brakes of his truck, Mr. Tapp, who was following in the rear, failed to stop as quickly, with the result that his car collided with the rear of the truck. Considerable fender and headlight damage resulted to the lighter vehicle.

No arrests were reported throughout the Belleville area during the past three days, police announced at noon.

PACKAGE FREIGHTER TO OPEN NAVIGATION AT PORT OF PICTON

A Canada Steamships Line package freighter will officially open navigation at Picton at the end of the week when it will make its first call for shipments of canned goods, a report from that town states today.

The opening is a week later than the date of last year, the delay being caused by ice conditions in the Bay of Quinte at that point.

Shipments of canned goods were assigned last year to several countries including Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, England, France, Bermuda, South America and Germany.

Shipments were made direct to Hamburg in the latter country last year, but due to high insurance rates on canned goods at the present time, no shipments are expected to be made there this year.

THE CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORES LIMITED

ment, replacement, or extension of plant, machinery or fixed equipment, a credit on its income tax equal to 10 per cent of the amount of money expended.

He described this as another link in a chair of work-creating and stimulating measures inaugurated in recent years, such as the exemption from tax of newly-opened metalliferous mines extended yesterday for another three years, and the Home Improvement and Housing Acts for the encouragement of the building industry.

Removes Import Tax

The estimated deficit for the year ended last March 31 was $55,666,000, allowing $25,000,000 for probable losses of the Canadian Wheat Board by reason of the fixed 80-cent wheat price. The estimated deficit for the year started last April 1 is $60,000,000 allowing nothing for assistance to wheat growers.

Apart from the Income Tax exemption for plant extensions, the principal tax change was removal of the three-percent Import Excise Tax from all goods entering Canada under the intermediate or lower tariff. The new United States Trade Agreement called for removal of the tax from United States commodities mentioned in the agreement but the Government went further. The minister estimated this would mean a tax reduction of $14,000,000.

Revenues for 1939-40 are placed at $490,000,000 against $501,000,000 last year. Thus the minister expects the $14,000,000 loss in revenue arising from the Excise Tax removal to be partly made up in other ways, mainly by an increase of $7,000,000 in receipts from the sales tax which remains at eight percent.

Must Face Demands

"Under current conditions of business recession and the continued threat of international lawlessness," said Mr. Dunning, "we must courageously face the demands made on us for unemployment and agricultural distress and for the vital requirements of National Defence.

"Much as I regret it, I am forced to ask our taxpayers to continue for the time being to bear approximately their present burdens because I am convinced that for us to give up our tax revenues at this time would only cause greater burdens and probably other serious difficulties at a later time.

"The size of our expected deficit might, indeed, suggest under more normal conditions an increase in tax rates but I prefer to make the present rates yield more revenue by doing everything possible to promote an increase in the national income."

Government spending in times of depression was not a matter of choice but of social necessity but the present Government had sought to make its expenditures on productive projects which would increase the national income.

Spending No Substitute

Government spending however, was no substitute for private initiative unless Government was to gradually take over all private enterprise and he was convinced the Canadian people were not prepared for the regimentation and loss of liberty that would involve.

Public men had been criticized for lack of leadership but the greatest need for courage and leadership was in the field of private investment. Too few business and financial men had been working to expand plant and employment and create new industries.

"Sometimes I think they pay too much attention to the risks which face business in other countries but have less significance in Canada," he said. "In any case; risks have always existed and business has overcome them. We shall get nowhere if our investing public spend its main efforts not in looking for new opportunities but in trying to forecast the short-term movements of the stock and bond markets. No important social purpose is served by that type of gambling."

Reflects World Conditions

Lessened prosperity in Canada during the past year in the main reflected world rather than internal conditions. It was the price Canada paid for dependence on world markets but a price much smaller than would have to be paid in lower standards of living should an attempt be made to force readjustment of all Canadian industry on a purely domestic basis.

The minister saw numerous indications, however, that business would improve and looked for an expansion in the sales of Canadian products in both the United States and the United Kingdom during the present year, despite fears of war.

"If only the fear of war could be removed," he said, "there would be released long pent-up economic and social forces which would soon transform again the world economic organization into a vibrant, dynamic machine bringing new prosperity and happiness to all countries."

Main Adjustments

Changes in the Customs tariff were few and these mainly adjustments as a result of the United States' Trade Agreement. A tariff board report on the radio industry prompted a reduction in rates on parts of radio tubes which will be rescinded if it is not reflected in reduced selling prices. The Government is also considering the Patent Law in relation to the abuse of exclusive privileges in connection with the radio industry.

A Tariff Board reports on vegetable oils was received too late for implementation in the budget because it requires consultation with the United Kingdom under the provisions of the Trade Agreement with that country.

It recommended reclassification of tariff items on animal and vegetable fats and oils, changes in duty, and an Excise Tax of three cents a pound on the vegetable oil content of shortenings and lard compounds and two cents on the vegetable oil content of soaps.

One Tax Change

If the consent of the United Kingdom to the proposed changes is received before the budget passes the House the necessary amendments will be introduced.

One tax change is designed to stimulate the use of apple cider in making vinegar to widen the market for low grade apples. It is an increase in the Excise duty on spirits used for making vinegar.

Hon. J. Earl Lawson (Con. York South, took the role of official opposition financial critic and adjourned the budget debate after a few comments He asked how the Government expected people to invest in industry when every year it followed a policy which made for uncertainty as to the conditions under which industry operated.

REICHSTAG SPEECH

The speech already has been given to translators for renditions in English, French and Italian. The only authoritative information on its character, however, was that it would be "very positive, both as regards the reply to Roosevelt and as regards suggestions for the further course of world event."

Britain's decision to introduce conscription will be regarded by Germany as strictly a British affair unless political motives are behind it, an official spokesman said.

Defence Own Affair

"Germany has always taken the position that the question of defence is every nation's own affair," he added. "Hence, if England decides all her young, able-bodied men should bear arms that is something we fully understand.

"As far as we have been able to learn, however, England seems to have been influenced by strong pressure from France, Poland and to some degree Rumania and Greece. If that is the case and it becomes obvious from debate in the House of Lords and the House of Commons that England has acted for reasons of international policy rather than pure defence needs, our attitude will naturally be a different one."

Termed as a 'Provocation'

The spokesman pointed to comment this morning in Hitler's newspaper Voelkischer Beobachter, which termed the British move a "provocation."

The British Ambassador to Germany, Sir Nevlie Henderson, who has been seeking an audience with Foreign Minister Joachim Von Ribbentrop to inform him, it was understood, that British conscription was a purely defensive move, will not be able to deliver such a message before the Friday speech.

However, after considerable pressure by the British Embassy, Sir Nevile was received by Baron Ernst Von Weizsaecker, Secretary of State in the Foreign Ministry.

Robert Coulondre, French Ambassador, returned to Berlin after an absence since March 18 when he was called home to report.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, April 26 (Special)—Thirty members of the choir of Picton United Church together with Rev. David Wren, pastor, and Prof. F. E. Walden, organist and choir-leader, were Sunday evening guests at King St. United Church, changing appointments with Rev. J. U. Robins and the local choir who were in Picton taking charge of the service there. A large congregation greeted the visitors, and the musical numbers were especially enjoyed. Prof. Walden is a gifted organist and under his direction the choir rendered several most enjoyable hymns and anthems. Rev. Mr. Wren, a speaker who is well known here, devoted much of his time to the subject of international complications, emphasizing the importance of the church and its functions and showing that it is one of the few organizations which is holding together under the trying ordeal of modern living

A strong rumor is current at the R.C.A.F. station that hundreds of transfers are due in the very near future and are only being delayed owing to the proposed visit of Their Majesties. Several groups have already been notified of their transfer, and some of the members of Technical Training School left last week. Others are due to follow soon and a report states that over one hundred members of Flying Training School will leave soon for Camp Borden. Vacancies caused by these removals will probably be filled by the arrival of new recruits who are said to be coming soon, the total numbering somewhere near three hundred.

Persistent rumors regarding the finding of the remains of Percy Knox of Glen Miller, believed drowned in the Trent River following his disappearance from the top of a dam on which he had been working one Sunday during the latter winter, have given police and undertakers, as well as residents of that area, a busy time during the past few days. A hurried telephone call one day last week from an excited young lady at Glen Miller stated that the body had been seen just at the dam there, but when police and a local undertaker arrived there was no sign of any human form. Several similar reports were circulated and in fact began several weeks ago. On Friday two men showed up at one undertaker's establishment to view the remains which they had heard were resting there, but meanwhile the search goes on without success to date. The river is very full at present and there has been little hope expressed of finding the body anywhere near the scene of the tragedy.

Local softball officials and enthusiasts, headed by President Victor Ryan, and including Secretary Art Black, Treasurer Bill McCue, and others, motored to Wooler last Thursday evening to sit in at an organization meeting there to help the Wooler club arrange for the season. There was some doubt at one time as to whether the Woolerites would join this year's association as some had felt that the split received last season was not fair in proportion, and this matter came under some discussion. It was pointed out at the meeting that last season some $240 was left at the end of the year, this being split $70 to the R.C.A.F. who won the local trophy and went through to the Provincial semi-finals, $50 to Yourex Billiards who were runners-up, $40 to Graham's Garage, next in the standing, and $20 to Wooler who finished last, leaving about $60 in the league treasury. Wooler fans and players were loyal all season, and felt that they should have received a larger share. However, it was pointed out to them that the year previous their share, based on actual gates all season long, was only $1.07, and when they compared the expenses and games played of the various teams they finally agreed that the arrangement was fair enough. Wooler will again be represented in the Trenton association this year, and report has it that G. Redcliffe will act as playing manager. The club will operate as an intermediate C entry, and a more equitable division of gates will be arranged early in the season. No home games will be played either at Wooler or at the R.C.A.F. as this was tried last year and found to be without any great public support The loop have already drafted a tentative schedule, and hope to stage an opening game about May 15th.

Sunday's fine weather brought out a large number of strollers, and motorists enjoyed the first really fine Sunday for driving this year. Many drove to Belleville and around the Bay of Quinte via Rednersville and Carrying Place, while others took advantage of the occasion to reach more distant points.

The funeral was held on Friday, April 21st, of Wilfred I. Ireland, 78, who died on Wednesday of last week at his late home on Benedict St. Service was held in King St. Church with Rev. J. U. Robins conducting, interment following in Mt. Evergreen Cemetery.

Mr., Mrs. Simmons, Foxboro, Happily Wed for 63 Years

Never Resided Farther Than Seven Miles Away from Present Home

NOTED SPORTSMAN

Foxboro, April 26.—(Special) — All very quietly and with but few of the villagers realizing that they had in their midst a couple who could lay claim to such a long record of wedded bliss, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Simmons, Foxboro's longest married couple, recently celebrated the sixty-third anniversary of their wedding.

It was on the 13th day of April back in 1876 that Mr. and Mrs. Simmons, then a young couple of twenty and twenty-one respectively, journeyed from the bride's home in West Huntingdon to the flourishing town of Belleville, where they were married by Rev. Mr. Lane of the Methodist Church before taking up residence in Foxboro and never, in the sixty-three intervening years, have the happy couple resided more than seven miles from the place where they first set up housekeeping.

Prior to her marriage, Mrs. Simmons was Miss Maria Smith, daughter af the late Mr. and Mrs. Bryce Smith of West Huntingdon. Mr. Simmons was born at Zion's Hill eighty-three years ago and both were brought up under the strict surveillance of the Methodist Church, a religion, which they have clung to all through their life, and are now valued members of the Foxboro United Church where until a few years ago Mrs. Simmons always took an active interest in the various departments of the Church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Simmons enjoy fairly good health and are quite able to look after the household duties in the home where all visitors are welcomed with the geniality and friendliness which is characteristic of the popular old couple.

Entered Carriage Factory

At the early age of sixteen Mr. Simmons came from his home at Zion's Hill to Foxboro where he entered the carriage factory operated by the late Charles Ashley and there for six years served an apprenticeship as a blacksmith and woodworker. At that time the Ashley Carriage Factory was a real flourishing business employing anywhere from twenty to twenty-five blacksmiths, who turned out wagons, cutters and sleighs. "But that is all past now", states Mr. Simmons, "with the advent of labour saving machinery and mass production the little shop was forced to close and it was torn down years ago."

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Simmons severed connections with the carriage factory and launched out on a business venture of his own. When but twenty-two years of age, he built and operated the blacksmith shop in this village which is now run by Mr. Arthur Walt. After nine years of blacksmithing in Foxboro he sold his holdings to the late Mr. B. Faulkner and for fifteen years operated a farm at Zion's Hill. Mr. Simmons then purchased a farm on the fourth concession of Thurlow about a mile east of Corbyville, which he operated for four years before selling out and purchasing another farm on the fifth concession near Thrasher's Corners, where his only son, Wallace now resides.

Built Three Houses

Twenty-eight years ago Mr. Simmons retired from farming and came back to live at Foxboro where until only a few years ago he has been actively engaged as a stone mason and concrete worker. During the thirty-seven years in which Mr. Simmons has at different times been a resident of this village he has constructed no less than three dwelling houses and for a time has lived in each of them. His present residence, which he built about twenty years ago, is on a site almost directly across the street from the location of the old Ashley carriage shop, where he served his apprenticeship as a blacksmith. It is from this dwelling, that Mr. Simmons is now able to look across the street to the place where he spent his early manhood and visualize Foxboro as it was back in '75.

Always an active sportsman, Mr. Simmons takes especial interest in hunting and fishing and as a Nimrod has a record, which many a hunter might be proud of. Never going hunting until he was over thirty years of age, the sport then took such a hold on him that for fifty consecutive seasons the hunting season never passed but what it found Mr. Simmons roving the bush country of North Hastings or Lennox and Addington in search of the wily buck and never has he come home empty handed. Owing to a temporary illness the string was broken last year but Mr. Simmons is quite confident, that the next hunting season will again find him with the rest of the gang at the old hunting lodge.

Channel Buoys Placed in Position

Seven spar buoys marking channels to the government dock and upper harbor were placed in the bay this morning by James Keegan, under the supervision of Harbormaster Jos. Waddell who opened the doors of the dock warehouse for the first time this season. The spars, property of the Belleville Harbor Commission, provide a valuable guide for tourists by water entering the harbor for the first time.

Official opening of the harbor for the season's shipping will take place probably on Saturday, it was stated by the Harbormaster this morning. No immediate registration of any carriers is expected on this date, and it is not known yet whether the steamer Glen Allan will make her first call at the dock this coming Sunday or one week from that date. "It all depends on ice conditions in the St. Lawrence" dock officials have been advised.

Belleville Commission will not make the presentation of a silk top hat to the first skipper entering port with a regular cargo. A search for the proverbial topper in the past has been an unsuccessful one; there is no silk hat of the type needed probably in Belleville, it is annually reported. Instead the first skipper is annually given the present of an excellent box of cigars.

Whether the coming season will be a heavy shipping year is not known as yet. The present soft coal strike in the United States may result in the reduction of some of this tonnage annually received in Belleville by water, but whether the incoming heavier shipments of fluid cargo for local oil and gasoline companies will offset this reduction is yet to be seen, it was stated.

CONSCRIPTION TO SAFEGUARD GREAT BRITAIN

Rumania Refuses to Join "Stop Hitler" Bloc

Sir Eric Phipps, Georges Bonnet Discuss Situation

POSITIONS UNCERTAIN

Positions of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria Uncertain It is Believed in French Official Quarters

Paris, April 27—(AP)—Rumania was reported today to have advised Great Britain and France of her opposition to entering mutual assistance pacts with them at least for the present.

This development was reported as Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet conferred with Sir Eric Phipps, British Ambassador in Paris, before the Frenchman started conferences with Grigore Gafencu, Rumanian Foreign Minister.

It was understood in diplomatic circles the British Envoy had brought the report that Gafencu, in his earlier talks in London, had expressed Rumania's opposition to immediate entry into mutual assistance pacts.

French circles in close touch with international affairs said Prime Minister Chamberlain's announcement of the conscription measure was largely of "psychological value" on the eve of Chancellor Hitler's answer to President Roosevelt's appeal for peace.

Positions Uncertain

Nevertheless, they said, the British action would precipitate a definite showing of hands in the Bal-

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Temperature of different objects! It is natural to think of all objects in a room as of the same temperature since they are all in contact with the same air. In most cases they are, barring the changes from floor to ceiling but feeling them with the hands gives a somewhat different impression. For instance, if a wool garment and a brass andiron are felt, wool will seem the warmer; that is because brass is a good conductor and conducts away the heat from the hand. On the other hand, if the temperature of the room is very high, that is, more than the body temperature, the brass object will seem the warmer as it keeps on supplying heat to the hand while wool will not, and hence feels cool.

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

DESPITE THEORIES OVERWEIGHT IS CAUSED BY OVEREATING

Detroit, April 27 (CP)—Here's an idea that is so old it's new.

Dr. Cyrus C. Sturgis of the University of Michigan's School of Medicine told a meeting sponsored by Michigan health organizations that fatness was caused by overeating. "It is amazing how many theories have been evolved to explain the cause of obesity when the simple truth is that it results from the consumption of an excess amount of energy in the form of food," Dr. Sturgis said. He was not enthusiastic about the theory of reducing by exercise.

300 BATHTUBS ARE A DRUG ON THE MARKET

Memphis, Tenn., April 27 (AP)—What to do with some 300 bathtubs it can't sell had the city commission in a quandry today. The tubs will come from houses razed for a housing project. The Works Progress Administration, in charge of the work, will allow the city to keep them as compensation for demolishing the building but forbids sale. Uses suggested to Commissioner Ralph Picard included: For coal bins, sanitary fish ponds, or gifts to relief clients.

DOUBLE-HEADED SNAKES ARRIVE IN HALIFAX

Halifax, April 27 (CP)—Every now and then a modern Neak's Ark arrives in Halifax with a cargo including from vagrant monkeys up, but the last straw came yesterday. It was a shipment of two-headed snakes aboard the Rotterdam-Lloyds freighter Kota Intent.

The snakes known to naturalists as cylindrophus rufus, are endowed with deluxe equipment consisting of an extra head appended to their body a short distance below their other head. The reptiles belong to A. Foehl of Williamstown, N.Y.

Madison, Wis., April 27 (AP)—Wisconsin struck a blow yesterday for hay fever sufferers with signature by Governor Heil of a bill placing rag weed on the official "noxious" list. Property owners will be required to destroy the weed—listed by allergy experts as one of the chief causes of hay fever.

Seminole Indians at World's Fair Thinks "White Man Rush Too Fast"

New York, April 2'—(CP)—Thirty-seven Seminole Indians from the Florida Everglades, the world of yesterday's exhibit at the World of Tomorrow, today finished their first week's squatting around the World's Fair grounds and decided "white man rush too much."

Chief Henry Cypress watched laborers hustling to finish the building and grounds for the fair opening Sunday, and said:

"White man rush too much. Work too fast. Indian work steady. Get same thing done."

Although the purpose of the Seminoles visit is to provide comparison of the life primitive with today's modes, the Indians had to make some concessions in custom to health authorities. Principal one had to do with the preparation of the stew which is the Seminoles staple food.

The custom was to cook the mixture at 6 a.m. with a reheat of the leavings providing the noon and evening meals. Health authorities induced the Indians to cook a new stew for each meal. They said it was more sanitary.

But when it came to providing washing machines for the tribe, Allan Davis, white guardian for the tribes, kicked and kicked hard:

"If I give them washing machines, they'll just put the kids in them and the children'll be mangled," he said.

PILOT TRAINING COURSE DETAILED IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. Ian MacKenzie Tables Estimates of $63,000,000 for Defence

4-YEAR COURSE

Expect to Train 126 Pilots Each Year with Advanced Work at Trenton

Ottawa, April 27—(CP)— Long-range plans for developing an air force as Canada's first line of defence were laid before the House of Commons yesterday by Defence Minister Mackenzie as he introduced the 1939-40 defence estimates of $63,000,000.

Feature of the scheme was a $6,000,000 pilot training program under which 50 British fliers a year will be trained here and Canadians will be qualified for a new four-year "short service commission" in the Royal Canadian Air Force, with six years in the air force reserve.

The training program, which will require instructional and maintenance staff of 68 officers and 600 airmen and 93 training aircraft, will train 126 pilots a year. Elementary training will be provided at civilian schools and flying clubs, intermediate training at Camp Borden, Ont., and most of the advanced instruction at Trenton.

Given $1,500

The short-term officers will, on completion of their four years service, be given $1,500 and assistance in re-establishing themselves, in addition to five per cent of their salary held back. Ultimate aim will be to create an air defence personnel half on a permanent basis, half non-permanent.

The Defence Minister reviewed the condition of Canada's defences when the present government came into power in October, 1935, tabulated the developments since then and sketched the government's defence plans for the next year and longer.

British Motor Taxes Oppressive Compared With Those of Canada

Toronto, Apr. 27 (CP)—British motorists probably would consider most Canadian Provinces tax-free havens compared with the heavy tax burden they must bear. The British budget of Tuesday added materially to their load by increasing the licence cost from 15 shillings per horsepower to 25 shillings per horsepower.

A low-price Canadian car with a 30 horsepower rating would cost its British owner $187.50 for a licence, compared with the $7 to $10 licence charge for a similar car in Ontario. A medium-price car with an Ontario tax fee of $15 would be assessed $225 in Britain.

The result is the average Canadian car would be in the luxury division in Britain and so most Britishers use automobiles with 8 or 10 horsepower, paying licence fees of $55 to $62.50.

British drivers pay about 47 cents a gallow for gasoline, which includes an 18-cent tax. Canadian motorists pay gasoline taxes ranging from 7 cents in British Columbia to 10 cents in Nova Scotia. In Ontario the tax is 8 cents.

Empress of Australia Will Bear King, Queen To Canada for Tour

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, April 27—(CP Cable) — Prime Minister Chamberlain announced in the House of Commons today that the King and Queen will travel to Canada and the United States aboard the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Australia instead of the battle cruiser Repulse.

A regular naval escort will accompany the liner which is scheduled to leave Portsmouth May 6.

Mr. Chamberlain told the House the government decided it would be preferable that the Repulse, originally selected for the trip, should not leave European waters because of the international tension.

The Empress of Australia was built in Germany in 1914 and when the Prime Minister made the announcement, Commander Arthur Marsden, Conservative, asked Mr. Chamberlain why a British ship had not been selected.

Chamberlain Answers

The Prime Minister answered:

"In the circumstances we have had to take what liner was available but perhaps it will be some consolation to the honorable member to know that the engines (of the Empress of Australia) were built in Glasgow."

It was stated authoritatively the King made the original suggestion that the Repulse, which had been reconstructed for the royal voyage, should be kept at home.

The Repulse is one of only three British battle cruisers capable of catching and destroying German pocket battleships such as those now in Spanish waters. The other two, the Hood and the Renown, are laid up for repairs in the naval dockyards.

The Empress of Australia, 21,833 tons, was built at Stettin, Germany and formerly was called the Tirpitz in honor of the German naval leader in the great war. It passed into British hands as part of the war reparations.

From official sources, it was learned the King and Queen will proceed with their plans to make the trip unless the general European situation takes an alarming turn.

Sir Edward Beatty's Statement.

Montreal, Apr. 27 (CP)—Sir Edward Beatty, Chairman of Canadian Pacific Steamships, Limited, made public the following statement today after Prime Minister Chamberlain announced the King and Queen would travel to America on the liner Empress of Australia instead of on H.M.S. Repulse:

"While deeply regretting the underlying causes that have brought about a change of plans, we of the Canadian Pacific are naturally very greatly pleased by the announcement that their Majesties will journey to Canada on one of our own ships. It is a very great honor, and I am sure that Canadians everywhere will feel a little thrill of pride and gratification as they read the news.

"The Empress of Australia is a fine ship, splendidly manned and has built up a very creditable record under the Canadian Pacific house flag, and I am sure that on this occasion she will acquit herself in a manner for which we will have reason to be proud."

HOUSE PROROGUES AFTER SESSION SINCE MARCH 8

Estimates Totalling $129,500,000 Passed During Closing Session

OPPOSES BONUS

Toronto, April 27—(CP)— The third session of Ontario's 20th legislature, enlivened in its closing hours by Premier Hepburn's two sharp sallies at Prime Minister Mackenzie King, will prorogue today. The House has been in session since March 8.

Announcement of prorogation was made by the Premier when the House arose shortly before two o'clock this morning. Earlier Mr. Hepburn had called the federal administration a "dying government" and Mr. Mackenzie King's announced intention of accompanying the royal party across Canada "cheap publicity."

EAMON DEVALERA CANCELS JOURNEY

Prime Minister of Eire Intended to Visit United States

Dublin, Apr. 27 (AP)—Prime Minister Eamon De Valera announced in the Dail today that he had cancelled his trip to the United States on which he was to have left Saturday.

Mr. De Valera said his reason for cancellation of the trip was "yesterday's grave event"—an apparent reference to Great Britain's adoption of conscription.

The Prime Minister was to have opened the Eire pavilion at the New York World's Fair and was expected also to visit President Roosevelt in Washington.

The British government was understood to have under consideration whether thousands of Irishmen working in England and Scotland would come under the conscription measure. It was said also to be debating the advisability of applying conscription to Northern Ireland.

These factors were believed to have influenced Mr. De Valera in the decision to cancel his trip. Conscription, of course, does not apply to Eire.

DUKE OF WINDSOR ENDORSES APPEAL

World - Wide Peace Conference Advocated Before It is Too Late

London, Apr. 27 (CP)—The Duke of Windsor joined today in endorsing an appeal by the London newspaper, Catholic Herald, for a world-wide peace conference "to save the world from the catastrophe of war before it is too late".

A letter from the Duke's secretary to the newspaper said: "As a Protestant by faith and free from all official ties, the Duke is confident that by a frank exposition of the thoughts and feelings of mankind today, and the honesty of the points used to emphasize the vital necessity not only of avoiding war now but to end this prolonged period of tension, this Catholic appeal cannot fail to commend itself to many millions, irrespective of creed, race or political doctrines."

The Herald issued the appeal to 350,000,000 Roman Catholics throughout the world and "to all men of good will". It has been placed before Pope Pius and all governments of Catholic countries.

Among those writing letters in support of the move were President Douglas Hyde of Eire; Viscount Hailsham, former Lord Chancellor; Sir Oswald Mosley, British Fascist leader, and Sir Hugh Walpole, the novelist.

London, Apr. 27 (CP) — Fresh measures to prepare Great Britain for "anything" followed today in the wake of the conscription announcement.

Former servicemen between the ages of 45 and 51 were invited to enlist in home defence companies which will be raised as part of the territorial army, the body that corresponds to the Canadian militia. The veterans would not be sent abroad in event of war but will be asked to serve for an initial period of four years.

Many of Britain's conscripts will be attached to anti-aircraft gun units which, as Prime Minister Chamberlain announced in the House of Commons yesterday, are being manned around the clock "through the period of uneasiness".

RUSSIA TO HELP ON BRITAIN'S SIDE

Ambassador to England Gives Interview on Way to London

Copenhagen, Denmark, April 27—Ivan Maisky, Russian Ambassador to Great Britain, returning from important conversations in Moscow, said today Russia would "assist Europe in case of aggression."

Arriving here by airplane en route back to London, Maisky said at the airport:

"I return very content. Russia's position in a possible conflict is perfectly clear. We are going to assist Europe in case of aggression."

Maisky's remarks were regarded as strong indication of progress in Anglo-French efforts to enlist Russia fully in the "stop Hitler" front.

Roosevelt May Address Further Peace Queries

Washington, April 27—(AP)—Belief was growing in diplomatic circles today that President Roosevelt might address further peace queries to Chancellor Hitler if the German leader leaves the door open tomorrow in his Reichstag speech.

The Puehrer will discuss the President's appeal of April 15 that Hitler and Mussolini pledge 10 or 25 years of non-aggression against 31 nations. In return for such a promise, Mr. Roosevelt proposed calling world economic and disarmament conferences.

If Hitler makes counter demands or does not reject flatly the conference idea, it was considered probable by many well-informed persons here Mr. Roosevelt would seek a concrete expression of those points. Those who hold this opinion cite the fact that during the Munich crisis last September the President followed up his first peace appeal with a second message to Hitler.

Government officials do not consider the delivery of Hitler's speech tomorrow an official reply to the President's proposals, inasmuch as it is being made to the German people rather than to Mr. Roosevelt. They would not be surprised, however if the German government afterwards acknowledged receipt of the April 15 appeal by transmitting to the White House a copy of Hitler's address.

Prime Minister Chamberlain Says Anti - Aggression Front Jeopardized by Doubts

London, April 27—(AP)— The House of Lords today agreed to the government's resolution approving conscription without a record vote and then adojurned.

London, April 27—(CP Cable)—Introduction of conscription has become necessary to safeguard Great Britain and to reassure her European allies she means business in taking the lead against aggression, Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons today.

Mr. Chamberlain spoke in opening debate on a government motion favoring conscription.

In view of Britain's liabilities to France, Rumania, Poland and Greece, and the decidedly tense general European situation it was imperative to kill the gibe being circulated throughout the world that "Britain is willing to fight to the last Frenchman," the Prime Minister said.

Appeals to Labor

He appealed to the Labor party to show a united front to the world on this radical change in British policy, which would conscript an estimated 200,000 men at the age of 20 for six months of military training.

Clement Attlee, Labor opposition leader, declared that the government's conscription decision was a gesture "throwing a monkey wrench into the machine." The Labor party opposed conscription because it believed it would weaken and divide the country instead of uniting it.

SMALL LOAN BILL PASSES COMMONS

Rate of Two Percent a Month on Loans for Less Than 15 Months

Ottawa, April 27—(CP)—The bill to regulate the small loan business passed the House of Commons last night after a last-minute effort to set a maximum interest rate of one per cent a month failed.

The bill requires all money lenders to obtain licences and fixes the maximum charge for interests, expenses and services, at two per cent a month for loans lasting 15 months or less and one per cent for loans extending more than 15 months. Angus MacInnis (C.C.F. Vancouver East) moved to cut these rates in half and forced a formal division. His proposal was defeated 82-40. Supporting it were all members of the C.C.F. and Social Credit Parties, most Conservatives and A. W. Neill (Ind. Comox-Alberin) as well as four Liberals, Thomas Reid of New Westminster, Elie Bertrand, Prescott, T. J. O'Neill of Kamloops and Dr. Harry Fleming of Humboldt.

Four Conservatives, Hon. Grote Stirling, Yale, Hon. Earl Lawson, York South, W. A. Walsh, Mount Royal and A. J. Anderson, High Park, supported the government majority in voting against the amendment. The bill, which has already passed the Senate, then received third reading.

Gives Self Up on Embezzlement Charge

Toronto, Apr. 27 (CP)—Sought by United States police the past ten years, Kerr C. Key, 63, one-time banker of Fayettesville, Ark., walked into the United States Consulate here Tuesday and asked to be returned to the United States on a $12,000 embezzlement charge, the consulate here announced today.

H. C. Hengstley of the consul staff said that Key was driven to Buffalo, N.Y., yesterday by one of the staff driving there to attend to some business. Key was arraigned at Buffalo on the charge by United States Federal authorities.

STATE COUNCIL WILL BE NAMED

Council Will Act for King While He is Absent in Canada

London, Apr. 27 (AP)—A council of state of five members will be appointed to act for the King during his absence in Canada and the United States. Although the Queen will be accompanying the King, the law requires that she be included in the council.

Besides the Queen, the councillors will be:

The Duke of Kent, youngest brother of the King.

The Duke of Gloucester, the next youngest brother of the King.

Princess Arthur of Connaught, granddaughter of King Edward VII and widow of Prince Arthur of Connaught, grandson of Queen Victoria. She is a cousin of George VI.

According to the Regency Act of 1937, the Consort of a King must be appointed to the Council of State when the Sovereign leaves the country—even though, as in this case, she is going with him.

FLOOD CAUSING LITTLE DAMAGE

Moira River in Foxboro District Still Overflows Banks

Foxboro, April 27.—(Special) — The flooded condition of the Moira River in the Foxboro district is today but slightly relieved from the near record breaking level of earlier in the week. Still rolling down from the upper reaches in a irresistible wave, the brown murky waters are piling in on the low lying land between here and Corbyville and despite the fact, that the lower Moira is running like a millrace to the bay, Ross's flats are still presenting a lake-like appearance and the original course of the river can only be distinguished by watching for the swift flowing current.

Aside from the inconvenience of flooded collars however and in one or two cases a bit of water in the stables, farmers and residents of the flooded area are reporting very little damage and the general feeling is that only time will remedy the present situation. In the meantime however, the road from Fairfield's bridge to No 14 highway still remains impassable to motor traffic with twelve or more inches of water running over it and the ominous sign "closed to traffic" still remains conspicuously placed in the centre of the right of way.

HAS COLD DIP

Cameron Rosevear, youthful Coleman Street resident, early last evening held the record for the season's first dip in open water, but the dip was an unintentional one.

Attempting to grapple a piece of wood floating near the car bridge on the lower west bank of the river the youth overbalanced on an unsteady perch near the pier and plunged into the water. Friends with a long pike pole assisted him to shore.

LEAFING OF MAPLES NOT FAR DISTANT

Buds on city maple trees have sprouted and blossomed almost visibly during the past few days of warmer weather, and today an examination of the trees reveals that first leafing is not far distant. Saturated lawns of residences in the city have almost become dried sufficient to permit the first spring work.

HOME OWNERS ASKED TO RAKE LEAVES IN PILES AT CURB

Home owners now engaged in the first spring cleanup of their yards and lawns are urged by the city department of public works to rake and pile neatly at the curbs of their walks the dead leaves and winter debris which is annually removed. First collections of this trash will be made by truck during the present week.

DISTRICT MEDICAL MEN HOLD MEETING HERE

Featured by addresses by prominent Toronto and Montreal medical men, the semi-annual meeting of District No. 6 comprising the counties of Hastings, Prince Edward, Northumberland, Victoria, Durham, Peterborough and Haliburton, held in the Hotel Quinte yesterday attracted a large attendance of medical practitioners from the district.

Principal speakers were Dr. Lionel Armstrong, Toronto, Dr. K. M. Heard, Toronto, Dr. M. C. Watson, Toronto, Dr. W. G. Crosbie, Toronto and Dr. Newell W. Philpott, Montreal.

Dr. H. M. Yelland, Peterborough, counsellor for the district occupied the chair and introduced the various speakers. Those in charge of arrangements for the meeting included Drs. F. C. Neal, Peterborough, chairman; Gerald Allison, Picton; H. D. Logan, Lindsay; A. R. Richards, Cobourg; H. B. Longmore, Campbellford; G. H. Stobie, Belleville, and C. E. Slemon, Bowmanville.

SEED SALES HEAVY

First activity of local seed and grain dealers is noted this week, and purchases have been fairly heavy, it was reported in agricultural circles this morning. This season the demand is heavy for early ripening varieties of grains, with Cartier oats and a new hybrid grain, Emmer, among the chief purchases. Sales of Dutch sets and oats and barley are also fairly heavy.

LARGER PERSONNEL SLATED FOR AIRPORT

Outlining the new Canadian training rules for pilots of the R.C.A.F. and R.A.F. which are to be instituted by the Department of National Defence, it is pointed out by the Defence Minister that for a period of the next three years the training camps at Camp Borden and Trenton would be increased by sixty-eight officers and approximately six hundred airmen, a statement made in the House of Commons which is of particular interest to Belleville and Trenton residents.

Purchasing power of the present force of officers and men at the Trenton base, is already heavy in Belleville.

DISTRICT STUDENTS AT KEMPTVILLE PASS TERM EXAMINATIONS

In the examination list of the spring term of the Kemptville Agricultural School, Wm. Bishop of Belleville, in the senior class of the school, and R. Stevenson, Belleville; A. E. Bonter, Bloomfield, Prince Edward County; Reg. Prentice of Maynooth and J. McAlpine of Maynooth, of the junior class, are reported to have passed successfully.

OFFICIAL INSPECTION OF BUSINESS PREMISES BY FIRE CHIEF LYNCH

Official inspection of stores, shops and buildings on Front Street and other business thoroughfares of the city will take place in the near future, Fire Chief William Lynch announced today in issuing a warning to proprietors to clean up cellars, and other parts of their buildings, yards and parking places.

"There are a certain amount of fire-hazards created every year in the accumulation of debris, old boxes and such stuff," the chief pointed out. "These should be removed as quickly as possible. He paid tribute to merchants of the city, however, in the care exercised in this important duty each year. "Belleville, generally is thoroughly cleaned up each year, but a word to the wise will not come amiss," he said.

Artist is at His Best in Depicting Contrasting Water Values

Residents of Belleville had a rare treat yesterday afternoon when they had the opportunity of visiting an exhibition of paintings by Manly MacDonald, A.R.C.A., held in the Collegiate Library under the auspices of the Library Club. About forty canvases were included in the collection, splendid examples of the artistry of this outstanding Canadian painter.

Of special interest were the scenes of this district, familiar views whose charm has been caught with unerring skill, Jack Roblin's boat house, a group of buildings along the lower Moira, the old mills at Shannonville and Lonsdale—The Salmon River has a special appeal for Mr. MacDonald and many of his paintings reflect scenes along its quiet waters. The artist is at his best in painting water, and has an uncanny ability to capture the contrasting picture of river and bay at different periods, dark and sullen on dull days when the highlights of the picture appear in shore and trees; sparkling with sunlight in lazy afternoon hours, or tumbling with the current.

The collection showed district scenes in every season, and included small and large canvases, of unusual beauty. Not all were from the Bay of Quinte district, however, other of the artist's favourite haunts were shown in his work. Mr. MacDonald finds, though, that for people of this locality paintings of beauty spots near and dear to them are most appealing; and art lovers in other centres are struck with the beauty that is to be found here.

Visitors to the exhibit had the pleasure of chatting with the artist. Tea was served during the afternoon, under the direction of Miss Margaret Bunting, who is in charge of the library at the Collegiate. Mrs. P. C. MacLaurin and Miss Alice Saunders poured tea and members of the Library Club who assisted in serving and as treasurers for the tea were Misses Betty Cormier, Anna Hogle, Phyllis Clapp, Eva Juby, Evelyn Allison, Jean Redfern, Phyllis Barlow, Mary Cooke, Barbara Lloyd, Marie Doyle, Ruth Alderman, and Joyce Watson.

Mementoes of Royal Visit Will be Sold At Post Offices

Official commemorative medallions in Canadian-mined silver and in bronze made from Canadian copper will be available at small cost to the general public of Belleville and district through the local post office as mementoes of the Royal visit of Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth, it is announced by Postmaster J. V. C. Truaisch.

The Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King has approved distribution of 2,500,000 smaller medallions to the school children of Canada. These are now being despatched to distributing centres. They all bear the likeness of the King and Queen, and on the reverse side, a special commemorative design. The silver medallions are over one and one-quarter inches in diameter, a little larger than the Canadian fifty cent piece, and those of bronze are smaller.

The Hon. N. A. McLarty, K. C., M.P., Postmaster General, has arranged that the medallions will be obtainable by the public at all post offices, including sub-post offices, or from the letter carriers or city offices, it is announced in the information received locally.

The silver medallions will sell at fifty cents each, and those of bronze at ten cents each.

Police Blotter

Sneak thieves were reported active in West Belleville of late, the money placed in milk bottles for collection having twice been stolen this week, a Catherine Street resident complained to police today. The money is removed from the milk bottles between midnight and the time of the arrival of the milk vendor, police were informed.

W. P. Boyd, 44 Catherine St., reported the theft of a leather windbreaker. Neighbours stated they saw a strange man at the rear of the Boyd residence yesterday afternoon. The windbreaker was stolen from within back shed adjoining the family kitchen.

Kingston police today reported the theft of a valuable fur coat from that city. As a result of information received from Kingston, City and Provincial Police searched the transient 'jungle' east of the city here today, but found no evidence of the missing coat. Kingston police hold a warrant for the arrest of the thief and added the coat was alleged to have been stolen by a transient. Local police were afforded a description of the suspected person.

ODD JOBS SCARCE

Never in the history of the Employment Service have odd jobs been as scarce as they are this year." Employment Service Superintendent William Ross stated today. "It may be the lateness of the season, or the desire on the part of former employers of this kind of labour to do their own work, but the fact remains that the jobs are not to be had."

Farm placements are also at a low level this year, he added. "Approximately twenty-five men have been placed on farms of the district to date, and take this number in comparison to the fact that a year ago last Saturday we placed twenty five men alone on farms, and it will give one an idea of farm employment conditions."

Superintendent Ross however, looks for decided improvement on the placing of farm labor within the near future". The season is backward and farmers are not hiring men until the Spring work starts. That is expected to happen within a week or so," he said.

Quaternion Club Told of Need Of Growth of Brotherhood

Rev. David Forsythe Says He is Proud of Empire That Will Take Insults so That Peace May Hold Out and Catastrophe be Averted

"I am proud to belong to that Empire that will take insults, be laughed at, and ridiculed, so that peace may hold out, and avert that terrible catastrophe that is worse than anything in the world," the Rev. David Forsythe, B.A., B.D., Montreal, National Secretary of Boys' Work of the United Church of Canada, declared in Tabernacle United Church Sunday School Auditorium last night.

Speaking to over one hundred members of the Quaternion Club, an amalgamated Young People's Association combining the Y.P.U.'s of Holloway Street, Tabernacle, Front Road and Point Anne churches, the speaker launched an eloquent appeal for the present generation "one that is needed more than ever in the world today" to cooperate with older generations and assist them to fight through the complications and intricacies that face them to find some way that men can be brothers to a greater extent than they are at the present time.

How Jesus Lived

"So many have said," the speaker declared, "the price of peace it too great. I do not agree with them," he said. "Preservation of human life matters more than anything on this earth. I pray God to move men's hearts, be they British, French, German or Italian, so that the divine spark may help find some way in which peace can be preserved and the madness of war averted."

The speaker drew an eloquent word-picture of the mode of Jesus' living. "His life was one of thinking, doing for others, and of assurance", he said. His very actions touched the heart of mankind so that history itself dated from His birth. Things He did, such as to make the supreme sacrifice for us, His willingness to do this and other things touched men's hearts. The world needs more thinkers like Him, time-thinkers and not those who think in terms of space, those who have faith, principle, a church and the will to mould their life about them, Mr. Forsythe pointed out.

Working For Peace

"The world needs time-thinkers like a great Japanese, who said that while peace may not come for one, two or three hundred years, it will come eventually, and as part of that great group working toward that end His life-work was done," the speaker asserted, "and if we believe in Jesus Christ and apply His principles to our problems, by the very nature of His life, men will be at peace some day. It may not come for one or two hundred years, but if we have some part in that effort then our lives are well and truly lived."

"Jesus Christ felt that Presence sustaining Him that made Him face anything the world had to give Him," Mr. Forsythe declared in appealing to the youth of today to realize the power for life that God has for them. "We, as well as Jesus, can be, to use a slang phrase, 'dead sure' of God, His power and strength to enable us to mould our lives along the lines of that of Jesus, the way of real, thinking, doing for others and of principle," he concluded.

Young Peoples' Banquet

Prior to the address by the guest speaker, an enthusiastic sing-song, that followed the banquet served by members of the Comrades Club of the church, was led by Mr. Forsythe. Lusty youthful voices joined in the many numbers sung, in an event that was outstanding in the evening's program.

The toast to His Majesty the King, was proposed by Miss Mildred Bonter, who during the course of the evening acted as chairman in a highly capable manner. Mr. John McClelland, proposed the toast to the Y.P.U. in an effective manner with the response being made by Miss Marion Daniels. Miss Helen Brown's toast to the church was responded to by Mr. William Brennan. Interspersing the various toasts was a highly enjoyable vocal solo given by Miss Phyllis May.

The Rev. R. E. Newman, Holloway Street United Church minister introduced the guest speaker. Hearty votes of thanks were extended to Mr. Forsythe, Tabernacle Church and the Comrades Club.

Mr. Harry W. Ackerman, who will act as chairman of Special Names Committee for The Salvation Army Building Campaign, which is to be put on in Belleville during third week of May.

Shannonville — Spring is here! this decision is beyond reproach, recall or in other words it is irrevocable. Yesterday a young lad about ten years of age was noted along front street bare-footed and carrying his shoes in his hands which is beyond all doubt a sure sign of spring.

Farmers were fairly beaming here Sunday as they witnessed what was without a doubt the nicest of spring (only by the calendar thus far) of the year. One farmer remarked during the day that "a few more days like this and we will be able to get on the land."

Although the muskrat season has been extended to May the fifth in this district some trappers on the Salmon river have taken up their traps due to the absence of these wily animals. However some trappers report that there are plenty of muskrats in the river but they are "working out more" and therefore what appears to be a good spot to set a trap today proves to be no good at all according to these exasperated trappers. Mr. Katz, well known fur buyer, said that the season was extended to accommodate the trappers in the Peterboro district where trapping has juct come in its own. According to Mr. Katz the quality of the furs in the Peterboro district is much superior to that in this district.

BRITAIN TO ADOPT CONSCRIPTION

Britain has made known to Chancellor Hitler that she is determined to see "this affair" to the end—this condition into which dictatorships have brought the world. Conscription for military service will be introduced next week, authorizing the British government to call up young men in peace time for military training. Two hundred thousand will be trained under this act yearly, though about 310,000 fall within the age limit applicable under the bill. Britain has thus given up one of her cherished possessions for the purpose of defending liberty and saving peace. She does not want to do this but she is compelled in the interests of protection, Mr. Chamberlain said yesterday.

The day before Britain had heard of the budget which places new burdens upon the people.

These are two of the burdens undertaken "not to wage war but to prevent it," as Mr. Chamberlain said.

These constant recurrences of crises are undermining the confidence of the people that peace will be preserved and at the same time it is stiffening the determination of the free powers to resist any power that would attempt domination of all the others. How serious the situation is is shown by Mr. Chamberlain's statement that these days cannot in any fair sense of the term be called "peacetime."

SAWDUST AS FUEL

During the years of the Great War and subsequently, when many experiments in economy were being made by the general public, one of the efforts in Port Arthur was to use sawdust as fuel, says Port Arthur News Chronicle.

Another was the burning of screenings from the elevators. A certain degree of success was obtained from the screenings, but they had shortcomings as a fuel. Bulk and odor were included and the ups and downs of the market were also a factor.

Sawdust had some virtues where good draft was obtainable and where constant attention could be given.

Although people generally have been depending more completely of late on the standard coal and wood experiments with sawdust have continued in the forest products laboratories of the Canadian Department of Mines and Resources. It is stated a practical and profitable use has been found for sawdust.

With the aid of an auxiliary grate, sawdust can be used for fuel in any standard heating unit. It burns freely, requires little attention and makes a fire which is easily controlled. Other points in its favor are its cheapness, lightness and the fact that it is low in ash content.

Already in British Columbia more than 15,000 homes, offices, theatres and other buildings are using sawdust for heating purposes.

An enormous amount of sawdust is produced by the trees cut down and sawn into lumber every year in Canada. The Forestry Branch estimates that 2,000,000,000 cubic feet of standing timber is the annual harvest. That amount of timber would make a pile as big as 800,000 box cars piled together.

Thus sawdust, which was formerly regarded as unavoidable waste, can now be turned to a profit for millowners.

BEARING THE COST

Britain's resolution is going to see things through. And she is ready to bear the cost without a grumble, for there are some things worse than debts—among them might be mentioned the loss of liberty. When the Britisher adjusts his back to the heavy burden of taxation for rearmament, he is carrying not only his own load, but the load of Empire and of the Dominions and of the other democracies. Many of the small democracies, it would seem, would have poor chance to defend themselves against an aggressor, armed like the prehistoric animals which roamed about the earth millions of years ago. When Britain arms to prevent war or, if war should come, to prevent the dictatorships from overrunning the culture and civilization of ages in one full swoop, she does what saves for some little fellow of a nation everything he has.

It is the old story. Like the responsible person and the really big man the greatest of nations and empires has to bear the brother's burden and in the long run the burden of even the nations which may be her foes for when she saves the world from them, she has to turn around and start rehabilitating them from the chaotic conditions into which their grasping attitude has plunged them.

As a Big Brother among nations, Britain puts the load on her shoulders, taxes herself and grumbles not. She knows she is right and that the primitive forces which are courted by dictatorships are but a reversion to a state which many a nation has long since abandoned. Britain is organized society—she is ready to protect herself and others against the force which ignores every right. As organized society must battle against outlawry, so the free nations must be ready against possible aggression.

"I would willingly give a life which has no insurance value for securing due performance of a solemn promise."—Mahatma Gandhi.

"We protect the fundamental rights of minorities in order to save democratic government from destroying itself by the excesses of its own power." —Charles E. Hughes.

"Business likes to hear kind words from the administration, but it's by your acts we shall know ye, not your promises; and we have to wait."—Gerald Swope.

HOLLYWOOD HAS DONE BRANTFORD WRONG by thefting the birthplace of the telephone from Brantford and transplanting it in the land of Uncle Sam for cinema purposes. The film glorifying Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, a resident of Brantford when he was working out his invention of the telephone, ignores Brantford completely and gives the United States all the glory of the invention. Brantford does not like being ignored particularly in connection with such a distinguished former resident as Alexander Graham Bell, and will not stand for being disassociated with the invention of such an important utility as the telephone—consequently the film may be banned in Canada, if Hollywood does not make the amend honorable. Not only Brantford but all Canada will refuse to make a gift of the life and works of Alexander Graham Bell to Uncle Sam—Scotland, his birthplace, also has a claim on the fame which clings to the memory of the inventor of the telephone.

CANDID

The inspector was paying his monthly visit to the village school. He examined the children in reading and general knowledge, and was very pleased with the answers he received.

After the last question had been asked and answered satisfactorily he rose to his feet and, looking at the upturned faces, remarked genially: "I wish I were a little boy at school again!"

He allowed a few minutes for this to sink in and then added: "Do you know why I wish that?"

For a moment or two there was silence. Then came a childish voice from the back of the room: "Cos you've forgot all you ever knowed."

Trees and Public Spirit

Belleville, Ontario,
April 25th, 1939

The Editor
Ontario Intelligencer
City

Dear Sir:

I think Mayor Bone has made an excellent Chief Magistrate and he and his Colleagues are to be congratulated on good work well done. But sometimes the Mayor's facile and charming voice and easy potential pen run away with him as it were. As witness:—

A March issue of your paper contained a letter from Mayor Bone complaining of lack of public spirit found by him in certain citizens. I think that letter was too indiscriminating. In the first place tree planting in the city such as Mayor Bone so ably advocates, is not a one man job. Mayor Bone will not, I am sure, deny that we called his attention to the land on West Bridge Street, Marshall Road, Sidney, and also to the former University Lands, in Thurlow, north of the C.N.R. Station (referred to by him) and offered him all facilities connected therewith. We also drew his attention to our own experience in tree planting, in which we indulged, but too near the City. We put out several thousand trees of various kinds and the result (in which the Entomological Department is much interested) can be seen at the south east corner of the O. S. D. road and the Marshall road, where there is a brave showing, despite the intrusions of local lurking lovers and the depredations of Christmas tree and other thieves, against whom we do not have sufficient protection.

Did Mayor Bone ever notice this before? If he wants to know the ownership of land west of the Fairgrounds, we or Mr. Harry Reeves, our lessee, can tell him. With regard to the land in Thurlow, which he describes as an eye-sore, are there no beauty spots in Belleville which could be similarly described? Its only fault is that it is vacant but not for long, soon to be occupied by those who hope to attract many thousands to a Meet (permission to hold which was refused by the City Council last year). Full facilities were also offered him here by us.

If Mayor Bone is in search of really successful tree-planting, he has only to look at the splendid avenue of maples and elms on Number Two Highway of which I am naturally rather proud, as my father and I planted every tree. Where, in Ontario can anything finer be seen and enjoyed? And yet we have had to fight for the existence of even those magnificent trees.

Yours truly,
W. N. Ponton.

Britain's Only Wild Cattle

It is announced that the famous herd of Chillingham cattle, of Chillingham in Northumberland, has been saved by the organization of the Chillingham Wild Cattle Association and the creation of a fund that guarantees their maintenance for a term of years.

J. Russell Goddard, Curator of the Hancock Museum, Newcastle, talking about the herd said: "According to tradition the Chillingham cattle are directly descended from the indigenous wild cattle which roamed the British Isles in prehistoric times. Well, you can believe that, or not, but the herd has existed in Chillingham Park in Northumberland for some centuries. It is probably derived from animals living there when the park was enclosed some 700 years ago.

"The animals are clothed with a coat of long shaggy creamy-white hair which curls slightly, especially on the head and neck. The hair in the ears is red, and the naked muzzles are black. The horns, moderately long and curved, are creamy-white with black tips, and there is a tendency for the horns of the cows to be more strongly curved inwards above the head than those of the bulls.

"And the cattle are wild in many ways. They will not as a rule allow human being to approach very near to them, and if they are followed they usually stampede. They object to the scent of man, and if one of their number is handled by human beings it is driven away from the herd, and if not actually gored or otherwise ill-treated is compelled to live alone for some time. The herd is governed by the strongest and the most vigorous bull, who is known as the "King Bull," and his reign lasts so long as he can hold his own against the younger bulls.

"The cows always give birth to their calves in some secluded part of the park where there is good cover, and the calves remain hidden in the undergrowth for some time—sometimes several weeks. Their mothers visit them from time to time to feed them.

"There are still one or two other herds of white park cattle remaining in the British Isles, but domesticated blood has been introduced into these from time to time in order to save them from extinction. There is, however, no record of the introduction of domesticated blood into the Chillingham herd; and in this respect the herd is unique and the most genuine of the white park cattle of the country. The herd now numbers 40 head, and the cattle appear to be healthy and in good condition."—From London Listener.

Industry Goes to the Milk Pail

Farmers have been worried of late years by the difficulty of disposing of their milk. It is the old story of poor markets and prices that hardly pay for fodder. Obviously the solution is to find new uses for milk. This the experts of the Bureau of Dairy Industry have been doing of late, with encouraging results.

Milk is already the raw material of budding industries. In a few years the clothing stores may be advertising suits of milk wool made of casein fibre. Price about $15. Your telephone set, pipe stem and buttons, if they look like ivory, may be already so much casein, the protein that solidifies when milk curdles. The shining coat on the paper of the book that you are reading is almost sure to be made in part of casein.

If it's glue to mend broken furniture that you need, ask for one made of casein, because it has extraordinary adhesive properties. The prescription that calls for riboflavin, one of the "B" vitamins, may be filled with an extract of whey, the liquid that remains after fat and casein have been removed from milk. And if the white-clad experts behind soda fountains top sundaes and drinks with something attractively white, and very nourishing, a year hence, it may well be a form of whey.

The significance of these developments is apparently when dairy statistics are considered. About a hundred billion pounds of milk are produced annually in this country. All of it is sold by farmers at the prevailing market prices to distributors, makers of butter, cheese and ice cream, or milk condensers and dryers.

Little Miss Muffett ate both curds and whey. The converters of milk are not so efficient. Every year some forty billion pounds of skimmed milk, six and a half billion pounds of whey, and two and a half million pounds of buttermilk must be disposed of. For the most part these by-products are fed to farm animals. If they can become the raw material of industry farmers would be better off (25 per cent. of the total farm income comes from milk), work would be found for idle hands, and the low-income group would be able to dress and button itself in milk at a price that it can afford.

Coal tar, a noisome ooze, which used to be turned into streams, where it killed fish, or buried in the ground, which it polluted so effectively that nothing would grow in it, became the raw material of rich industries. So may it be with milk.—N.Y. Times.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

Outdoor Play Prevents Tuberculosis

We were taught that the individual with tuberculosis or with a tendency to tuberculosis had a flat chest. It came to me as a surprise, whilst still a student to read in the Journal of the American Medical Association many years ago that the tuberculous chest was not flat but round and deep. It appeared to be flat only because the shoulders, due to weakness, were dropped forward.

As a considerable part of my work was the examination of boys and young men I was able, by the aid of a mirror, to show many who apparently were flat chested that if they held their shoulders back, they could see that their chest was round and deep. And the reason that they had, or were likely to develop, tuberculosis, was that their chest was undeveloped, immature, practically the same shape as when they were babies. The baby chest is about as deep as it is wide; the adult chest should be three or four inches wider than it is deep; that is, in the proportion of 10 to 7.

Dr. S. A. Weisman, Minneapolis, in a study on the chest and environment or surroundings, showed that children living in the poorer parts of the city had, on an average, a deeper chest, weighed less, and were shorter than the children in the better districts. "Ten times as many cases of tuberculosis were reported from a school district which is, perhaps, the poorest in the city as were reported from the best school district."

Dr. Weisman made a further study to find out of these individuals with the deep but narrow chests were more likely to have the tuberculous organisms present — even with no outward signs—than those with the wider chests. Accordingly the tuberculin test was made which is "extremely valuable in finding out who, in a family or community, has tuberculosis already present ready to become active under certain conditions." This type rarely causes any symptoms but is the forerunner always of re-infection, destructive forms of disease, when it does develop.

An examination of 1324 girls and 1399 boys, between ages of 7 to 15, showed the children who had a 'positive' test had, on the average, a definitely deeper type of chest—deeper in proporiton to width than the children who did not show a positive reaction.

This last study shows that tuberculosis is found more often in the poor districts because the children are underdeveloped.

The lesson for all is that children who can get a chance to play outdoors and so widen their chests are less likely to develop tuberculosis.

APPOINTED ARCHBISHOP

Bishop Francis J. Spellman, of Boston, has been appointed Archbishop of the New York diocese to succeed the late Cardinal Patrick Hayes. It is expected that Archbishop Spellman will be elevated to the College of Cardinals at the consistory that Pope Pius has set for the end of May.

OPPOSITION LEADER

The Provincial Legislature, voting to boost the indemnities of its own members, has got around to recognizing the special position of Leaders of the Opposition. Provision is made for the "Leader" of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition" in every province except Manitoba and Prince Edward Island.

The Provincial Government has now provided an appropriation of $2,000 for Opposition leaders. But Mr. Bracken and his associates have dodged what seems to them the delicate matter of deciding who is leader of the Opposition in Manitoba. They propose to divide the $2,000 among Messrs. Errick Willis, leader of the Conservative party, and S. J. Farmer, C.C.F.-Labor, and S. E. Rogers, Social Credit.—Winnipeg Tribune.

PILOT TRAINING

Hon. Grote Stirling (Con. Yale), last defence minister in the former administration, in brief reply took exception to the "partisanship" in the Minister's outline of defence deficiencies under the Bennett regime. No government could have asked for greater defence appropriations at that time under the general disarmament feeling, he claimed.

"Defence Anxious"

Mr. Mackenzie felt Canada was becoming "defence anxious", in the light of recent international developments. While some might say the government was proposing to spend too much on defence in view of the depressed condition of thousands of her citizens, the Minister contended economic security was impossible without national security. To those who would suggest the government was not spending enough, he pointed out how far the government had progressed in three years.

After tabulating what had been bought and done with the $95,000,000 defence appropriations in those three years, he declared those who said there was "nothing to show for the money" were making a "thoughtless, unfair and somewhat harmful statement."

Mr. Mackenzie said Canada should be prepared to defend by force if necessary:

"1—Our religion, our freedom, our institutions.

"2—Our coasts and coastal regions, our centres of population and industry, our main ports and the focal sea areas where trade routes converge in the vicinity of our main ports.

"3—Our neutrality in a war in which Canada is not a belligerent.

"4—Internal order."

Canada Responsible

Large scale attacks by enemy forces on coasts and trade were out of the question because of the distance from bases, the world political situation and the existence of the British navy on the Atlantic and the United States navy on the pacific.

Minor raids, however, were not only a possibility but a probability and Canada's responsibility for the protection of trade was limited to Canadian ports and the short distance outside the ports extending to the main trade routes which were policed by the navies of Great Britain and the United States.

Canada's defence effort was limited because it was based on two assumptions, said Mr. Mackenzie, that there would be no war with the United States and that Canada would not single-handed, engage in war with any overseas power. A century of good relations with the United States has eft Canada without fear of attack but the modern airplane had changed things.

"After century of immunity Canada is today again vulnerable to enemy hostilities," he said, "and has to cope with a real problem of national defence just as in the early years of its history."

Maintain Patrol

1. Maintain a ceaseless patrol of lines of approach for attacking forces;
2. Defend seaports, terminals, shipping and overseas trade in the vicinity of ports.
3. Prevent the utilization by any belligerent of Canadian territory, territorial waters and air for an attack on an allied or friendly nation.

Since taking office the government had added four destroyers, one training schooner and four minesweepers to the Canadian navy, had obtained four three-inch anti-aircraft guns, had three heavy coast guns relined, spent $153,000 on gas mask equipment and enlarged the stores of all classes of ammunition.

The present strength of the air force was 210 planes including 36 modern service craft, 16 obsolete service and 158 trainer and civil type planes. There were 109 machines on order and on delivery of these and after scrapping 69 machines the force would have 250 aircraft including 112 first line service types and 138 training and survey types.

Objective Outlined

The objective was 11 permanent and 12 non-permanent air force squadrons which would mean 527 aircraft, 526 officers and 4,500 airmen in the permanent force, 220 officers and 2,014 airmen in the non-permanent.

The strength of the permanent force this year would be 273 officers and 2,172 airmen. Machines to be purchased this year were listed as: Four flying boats, six army cooperation planes, 12 general purpose twin-engines, 10 new type bombers single-engine, 14 fighters, 18 bombers twin-engine, four advance trainers and 15 observation planes.

The Defence Minister indicated an expanded naval program, especially as to personnel. The navy personnel would be increased to 1,965, anticipating the new vessels to be acquired. Two new Royal Canadian naval volunteer reserve divisions were being created and a fishermen's reserve was to be organized on the Atlantic similar to that already set up on the Pacific coast.

TAKE 4 PILOT tNkA

Flotilla Leader

A new flotilla leader costing $820,000 would be purchased from the British admiralty to increase Canada's navy. Plans had also been completed for the building in Canada of anti-submarine boats, motor torpedo boats and a training schooner for the west coast.

Among militia expenditures, including stores and new equipment, was provision for new clothing for the non-permanent miitia. For 20 years that militia had been outfitted in uniforms left from the war with depressing effect on recruiting. As a start, 20,000 new jackets were being bought and 10,000 pairs of trousers. They would be better fitting, smarter in appearance, and the traditional khaki would be adhered to.

Discussing the training program, Mr. Mackenzie said final details of the arrangement to train British pilots in Canada had not been completed but general agreement on the question had been reached for giving royal air force men intermediate and advanced training here.

These men will be trained "under the auspices of the Canadian Department of National Defence" with costs of their training to be reviewed after 12 months for possible revision on the basis of the war office payment.

Not Necessarily Graduates

Canadian candidates for training for the short term commission will not be required to be graduates of a university or royal military college. They must be 18-25 years of age; qualified pilots of the auxiliary active air force; or commercial pilots. At expiration of their four-year commission, they could enlist for another five years active service.

Each qualified club will be given three planes and each cub will have a separate contract with the department. They will be paid according to flying hours and $200 for each officer trained, in addition to payment for lectures and ground instruction.

QUIET ON STRIKE FRONT

Kitchener, Ont., Apr. 27 (CP)—All was quiet along the strike front at the plant of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company today where employees of the shoe room went on strike Tuesday morning.

Today, the number of non-working employees numbered about 350. The company said many of these are workers who were forced to become idle because of stoppage of production brought about by the strike of about twenty men.

No conferences have been arranged at which a settlement is to be discussed.

Britain's Air Guard now has 36,000 members, all it can train as pilots at present, and a waiting list is being compiled.

These "COOKS" ARE CHAMPIONS

Mrs. George E. Cook, R.R. 5, Acton, Ont., with her daughters Edna (centre) and Florence.

MRS. COOK and her two daughters live up to their name. They have won nearly eighty prizes for baking at the Acton and Erin Fairs. "I really believe," says Mrs. Cook, "that Robin Hood is the best flour. I like it for cakes, cookies and pies; and it makes such fine-textured, beautiful white loaves of bread. I do all my baking with Robin Hood."

It isn't by chance that more Canadian women use Robin Hood than any other flour. Robin Hood is "the choice of champions" because champions are wise housewives who think first of giving their families the best in bread, cakes and pies. And Robin Hood gives them the best.

Every kernel of the choice Spring wheat used in milling Robin Hood is thoroughly washed before it is ground. Look into a bag of Robin Hood and see how clean and white it is. Test its fineness and rich baking quality by rubbing a handful between your fingers. Best of all, try Robin Hood in your own kitchen. If you haven't used it before you'll be delighted to find how good a cook you really are!

Sincerely,

Evangeline

The Stars Say

A RATHER routine day is forecast by the dominant lunar transits. While there may be some interesting slants on rather obscure or complex activities or modes of thought, generally affairs move in accustomed grooves, with but little to disturb or stimulate, unless the tendency be to subtle, singular or occult avocations.

Those whose birthday it is may have to endure a rather routine year, with affairs running along lines of least resistance, unless there be a tendency toward the occult, metaphysical or other curious or intriguing preoccupations. It is a favorable time for research or study of the finer forces of spiritual aspects of life.

A child born on this day may have certain tendencies or talents toward the unusual or mysterious, although it should have sound mentality and definite force of character for very urgent and drastic action when aroused from its preoccupations.

AT THE BELLE

"THE SAINT STRIKES BACK" "I'M FROM MISSOURI"

One of the truly amazing characters in the annals of detective fiction is brought to the screen in RKO Radio's "The Saint Strikes Back", featuring George Sanders and Wendy Barrie, in the top roles. This thrilling mystery drama is now on the Belle screen.

Based on the widely-read best sellers by Leslie Charteris, master crime writer, whose famous character of "The Saint" has interested millions, the current offering is the second in a series of films depicting the amazing exploits of the debonair killer who wars on crime barons.

Sanders is cast in the title role of "The Saint", a lone wolf avenger whose career sometimes against it—baffles the greatest criminologists of the day. When he becomes interested in a beautiful girl whose father has been victimized by the mysterious underworld kingpin, "the Saint" decides to avenge the wrong. Toward this end he volunteers to aid the police track down the criminal providing he has carte blanche to use his own methods.

His unique mission takes him through a series of dangerous experiences. He fights murder with murder, turns housebreaker to obtain incriminating evidence, violates all man-made laws to achieve his objective. His unusual moves eventually provoke the police as well as antagonize his enemies, and when even the girl he is trying to befriend becomes distrustful of his motives "the saint" finds his task most difficult.

Ultimately the modern Robin Hood ensnares all the members of the organized ring kills the leader, permits a friendly police inspector to assume the credit and clears the name of the girl's dead father, bringing the story to a most suspenseful finish.

Bob Burns New Comedy

They've decked out Bob Burns in top hat, white tie and tails and set up against the British nobility in his new picture, "I'm From Missouri", which is the associate feature. But whether in full dress or good old-fashioned overalls, the sage of Van Buren is still a match for the best of 'em, and comes out winner in this heart-winning story of the adventures of a rough-hewn Missouri mule dealer abroad.

The trend started by Burns in his recent "The Arkansas Traveller", which marked his change from musical comedy to the portrayal of native Yankee characters, is continued and even carried to a higher level in "I'm From Missouri." In this good-natured and down-to-earth story the popular humorist plays a Missouri mule magnate out to save his friends from bankruptcy. He's also the tolerant and devoted husband of a social-climbing wife, and the man who straightens out the love affair of a confused young couple.

"I'm From Missouri", charts the adventures of Burns, the leading citizen of a small Western community, from the moment he determines to do something about a recent British army order mechanizing the mule corps. When he leaves for London, to take care of the matter in person, his wife, played by Gladys George, goes along to fish in the waters of British society.

Setting Burns down right in the middle of the Mayfair "400" gives him the perfect opportunity to display his dry, homespun wit, his heart-winning devotion to the sincere things in life and, in the climax, his Yankee ability to strike a good bargain. Miss George in one of her rare comedy roles, gives an excellent account of herself as the typical American woman, dead set on crashing society.

"Air Waves" an entertaining short, will be presented on the same program.

AT THE McCARTHY

"LAW OF THE UNDERWORLD"

Action and excitement is the key-note of the entertainment presented now on the screen of the McCarthy Theatre, where an excellent two feature program that will please all movie-goers is now playing. In the first feature offering "Law of the Underworld" with Chester Morris, Anne Shirley, Eduardo Ciannelli and Walter Abel in the major roles, a thrilling story that deals with gangster activities in a large city, packs 70 minutes of real punch and presents Chester Morris, as a modern Jekyll and Hyde, leading a double life, one as a society man and another as the head of a local crime ring. The story goes on to tell that when his friend played by Walter Abel, is appointed a special prosecutor, things begin to happen. And when Morris' trusted lieutenant, Eduardo Ciannelli, begins plotting with Morris' girl friend, Lee Patrick, to depose him as leader, more happenings arise.

These complications are added to by the troubles of Anne Shirley and Richard Bond, a pair of youngsters who, in attempting to regain money that has been stolen from them by Ciannelli, are forced to take part in the gang's robberies.

All three factors combine to bring about situations that for sheer suspense make "Law of the Underworld" one of the season's outstanding films.

Morris gives one of the finest portrayals of his career in the difficult role of the two-faced socialite crook. Miss Shirley is equally fine as the bewildered girl, and young Bond, a newcomer to screen ranks, matches her sensitive performance in promising fashion. Highly convincing characterizations are also supplied by Ciannelli as the treacherous crook and by Abel as the prosecutor, with notable contributions by Lee Patrick, Paul Guilfoyle and other favorites. Lew Landers' clever direction and the excellent mounting given the film by Producer Robert Sisk match the fine screen play by Edmund L. Hartmann and Bert Granet, based on the successful stage play, "Crime", by Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer.

"Painted Desert"

Young Women's Guild

A very interesting meeting of the Young Women's Guild was held on Monday evening at the home of Miss M. Hill, Foster Ave. The meeting was ably handled by Miss D. Kerr, in the absence of the President Mrs. Mills. Mrs. Archibald led the Guild in a beautiful worship service. Miss Dorothy Boyle had charge of the discussion Mental Health.

It is easy to state the principle of Mental Health, but few people attain to the ideal of mental health or achieve a perfectly balanced personality. But this fact should not deter us from striving to reach the ideal.

To live peaceful and useful we must strive for emotional maturity, the perfect balance between the two extremes of actual inferiority. Self-importance constitutes emotional maturity.

One should learn to look clearly at every situation which confronts him. This analysis may be during before, or after we have acted best of all at all three times, but look we must if we are going to attain and keep mental balance. But such facing of life must always be a preliminary to doing something. A life spent in self-contemplation is not a wholesome life. The wholesome life is the active life.

Most important cause of mental disintegration comes from the attempt to deceive oneself or from failure to make a straight forward adjustment when some internal conflict is discovered.

Make your own happiness, do not let your peace of mind depend upon conditions over which you have no control. It is well to act in a way that merits the good opnion of others, but is foolish to allow one's happiness to depend upon that opinion.

Cultivate the habit of living in the present. A person's ability to concentrate on his immediate problems and to ignore the past and the future, except insofar as they are related to the present, is a gauge of his sanity.

Steer clear of worry. The habit of worry, like every other habit, becomes easier with indulgence. Happily the habit of worrying may be cured. The healthy minded individual must be content with relative perfection. He should be ambitious to achieve and earnest in his striving, but not unduly dejected when he is not the absolute best. He should peacefully recognize that everyone has his limitations.

Another preservation of mental health is work. Many people are neurotic because they have nothing serious to do. There is less danger from overwork than there is from idleness. The man who has a definite task to accomplish is protected against much unhealthy thinking; his interest in his work takes his mind off himself. The satisfaction he derives from the successful performance of his duties compensates for many disappointments.

Last, but by no means least, is the saving gift of humour. If people could learn to laugh at themselves, they would lead more peaceful lives.

Some very interesting papers on this subject were given by Miss J. Smith, Mrs. Gibson, Miss M. Wardner, Mrs. G. Miller and Mrs. R. Keel.

Popular Sidney Young Lady Honored By Congregations

Last Friday evening a crowd of people numbering about eighty, gathered from Stone, Wallbridge and Scott's appointments on the Sidney circuit, in the Community Hall at Stone Church in honor of Miss Margaret Johnston, the daughter of the parsonage, who is to be married early in May.

The platform was decorated with strings of white crepe paper and two large white bells. In the centre of the table was a doll dressed as a bride. Several lovely plants in full bloom were also in evidence.

Mr. Wm. Holmes, superintendent of Stone Sunday School, called the meeting to order. With Mrs. Edgar Lane at the piano, community singing was indulged in. Wallbridge favored with a musical selection by Mrs. Morley Phillips and Mr. Blake Johnson. Miss Lyra Detlor gave a lovely piano instrumental.

Miss Johnson was then called to take a chair on the platform and the following address was read by Mrs. Morley Sine:

Dear Margaret,—

We, a few of your many friends and well-wishers from Stone, Wallbridge and Scott's, have gathered here this evening to spend a social hour with you and to wish you "bon voyage" on the sea of matrimony, which we hear you are contemplating in the near future.

Margaret, it goes without saying that you will be missed both within and without the parsonage. You have ever been ready to use your talents in the Master's service, with your ready smile and friendly voice, showing us that that service is a joyous one.

As daughter in your mother's house you have taught others filial obedience and respect.

We are all born in the image of God, we all have some divine qualities and as we reach the age of understanding we either enlarge or decrease these.

"To every one there openeth
A way, and ways, and The Way.
The high soul climbs the High Road
The low soul gropes the low;
And in between on the misty flats
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every one there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every one decideth
Which way his soul shall go."

We are pleased that you have accepted your personal responsibility and we know your capacity for service will increase with the years.

Life is full of ups and downs, as any journey is, and we would not wish for you one long continuous stream of pleasures and good times. It is the fire that refines the gold. But we do wish for you God's close watch and guidance and the conviction that "when God wills all is well."

And when you are in your new home we know that numerous opportunities will come to you to prove your Master; and though many miles divide us, it is only a short distance after all, for does not God rule the universe? We pray that we, as well as you, may always have the faith of the little girl who sang "God's in His Heaven, All's Right with the World."

Now, there's an old saying that "Words without deeds are dead" so we wish to supplement our words with these gifts to you, which though not very valuable materially carry with them a host of good wishes for both you and the man of your choice, and may God bless and keep you both.

Signed by:—Mrs. Vermilyea, Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. Jeffrey, Mrs. L. Ketcheson, Mrs. E. Lane, Mrs. Jas. Sine, Mrs. F. Shorey, Mr. M. B. Sine, Mr. Howard Dafoe.

The following were then presented: Sandwich toaster by Mrs Holmes, and Crystal lamp by Mrs. Vermilyea, from Stone; Silver rose bowl by Stone S. S.; Normandie chime clock by Mrs. Lawrence Ketcheson from Wallbridge; Silver baker with Pyrex lining by Mrs. Chapman, from Scott's.

Miss Johnson replied in a few well-chosen remarks, voicing her appreciation and giving an idea of the part of the country she was going to.

Miss Helen Lane read the following address:

Dear Margaret,—

Following the announcement of your approaching marriage, we, the girls of the Junior Institute, wish to share also in your joy—not because it is the custom, but to show our appreciation of your life spent among us. We loved your cheerful companionship and deeply regret that you are leaving us. However, we wish you much happiness and God's blessing in your matrimonial voyage. And as a remembrance, we ask you to accept this casserole.

Very often married life is made up of a mixture of joys and sorrows so just in passing, here's a recipe that came our way for a happy home:

"The ornament of a home is cleanliness,
The honor of a home is hospitality,
The blessing of a home is piety,
The happiness of a home is contentment."

Wallbridge Jr. Institute Girls,
April 21, 1939.

Miss Laura Sine presented the Pyrex casserole. Miss Johnston briefly replied.

Mr. Knight, Mr. H. W. Rose, Mr. M. B. Sine, Mr. Sam Nicholson, Mrs. Jas. Sine were then called on for a few remarks. They all wished Miss Johnston happiness and prosperity in her married life.

Rev. Mr. Johnston replied, thanking all for their kindly thoughts for Margaret.

After singing "God be with you till we meet again," a bountiful lunch was served and a social hour spent.

But what is soup without a cracker, a crisp, crunchy soda wafer! Crothers Meadow Cream Soda Wafers, in the new dainty size, will appeal to every hungry appetite. Be sure to include them in your shopping list today. Your grocer has them . . . packed in the new attractive 12 oz. package.

Boys Will Be Boys

Shannonville—Did you ever see a flour bag go walking? Well some people have but they are keeping very quiet about the fact. No kidding.

Back at Blessington a little settlement north of this village two young lads have set up a rather unique arrangement by which they have enjoyed themselves immensely at the expense of unsuspecting passersby. They had the idea working for a week and have used up a few flour bags in the meantime and if any farmers in that vicinity are missing flour bags don't say we didn't tell you. Now to let everyone in on the secret of the walking flour bag. Those two lads fill a flour bag with feathers and tie a strong rope to the bag and lay the bag supposedly containing flour on the road and that is when the fun begins.

Along comes an unsuspecting farmer who sees the 'flour' bag and thinking that the bag has fallen off a passing truck out jumps the farmer and when he goes to grab the bag imagine the fun —for the boys.— The joke is usually perpetrated in the evening and therefore the farmer ever believing he is seeing double or has imbibed a little too freely moves along rather hastily. However one unfortunate farmer when he attempted to grab the bag in some manner got his feet caught in the rope and he landed unceremoniously either on the bag or in the mud—our unsung heroes didn't wait to see—. However even a joke even as good as this sometimes will backfire and this did. Along come unsuspecting motorist he grabs for the bag, he misses and so he gets in his car but the sourpuss turns around and comes back with his lights dimmed and runs on top off the bag and gets out and the last he heard sounded like this "Take the bag darn you if you want it"—which he did by the way. But the boys were undaunted and obtained a new bag and started all over again. However the boys were undaunted and are still perpetrating the trick at least they were up to last night it was rumoured.

Marmora

Marmora—A number of relatives friends and neighbors assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. Brawley on Saturday evening, April 22nd, to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. The evening was spent in progressive euchre, four tables being in play. The ladies' prize was won by Mrs. Fred Meraw, while Mr. John Doyle won the gentleman's prize. The consolation prize went to Mrs. John Doyle. Immediately after the cards, a sumptuous lunch was served by the hostess. Mr. and Mrs. Brawley were recipients of many beautiful gifts, among which was a studio couch from the family. Out-of-town guests were: Miss Kate Doyle, Merrickville; Mrs. Jno. Forestell, Lindsay; Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Doyle, Campbellford; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Meraw, Madoc. At the close of the celebration, Mr. and Mrs. Brawley appeared dressed as bride and groom, the bride wearing a veil and carrying an arm bouquet. The guests formed a circle around them and sang "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." Mr. and Mrs. Brawley in a few well-chosen words thanked the guests for making the celebration a delightful one.

Mrs. M. Clement who has spent the winter in Detroit, has returned to her home here.

Mr. Lewis Phillips is confined to his home through illness.

Mr. and Mrs. James McGrath of Timmins arrived in Marmora on Tuesday and will take over the management of Tipperary House, Crowe Lake.

Carmel Group Wins South Hastings Honors In Debate Contest

Carmel United Church Young People's Union on the Cannifton Circuit gained first honours in the South Hastings division of the Bay of Quinte Young People's Debating contest when they defeated St. Paul's United Church Group in the finals held in Stirling. The question "Resolved that Orientals should be excluded from Canada" was successfully defended by the Carmel team, Mr. Earl Dafoe and Miss Marion Wardell, who garnered sufficient points to win over the Stirling team, Mr. Don Williams and Mr. Morley Clark, who were close seconds in the district contest.

A good number of visitors and members were present for this interesting evening which was opened by a devotional period conducted by the Foxboro United Church Y.P.U. under the leadership of their President Mrs. W. Sine.

Mr. Ralph Campbell, convener of the Literary department of the Bay of Quinte Young People's Conference, acted as chairman for the evening and the difficult task of judging was capably handled by Miss Margaret Reynolds, Miss Doris Cooper and Col. Roscoe Vanderwater.

At the conclusion of the fine program luncheon was served by the members of the Stirling Union and a brief social period enjoyed St. Paul's team are to be commended for the fine showing having run the leaders a close second for the District Championship.

Sacred Drama Presented in St. Andrew's

A large congregation was in attendance at the special evening service on Sunday at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church when the men of the church presented a sacred drama 'A Million Dollar Boy'. Taken as a thorough-going example of the present day boy, Glenn Eggleton was placed for auction before the characters symbolizing the various walks of life. From these he was not permitted to choose but each bid against the other for possession of him. With the bids rising higher and higher the sale finally closed with church and things religious bidding one million dollars. Characters were well enacted with each, in addition to making his bid outlined briefly reason why they should be given the custody of the boy.

Cast of Characters

The Million Dollar Boy, Glenn Eggleton, Auctioneer, R. W. Micklejohn, War, Wm. Dermedy; Pleasure, E. Orimston; Crime, Art Duncan; Big Business, Harper Rollins; Fatherhood, Roy Eggleton; Education, Lorne Johnson; Agriculture, Carmen Pitchett; Professions H. R. Tompkins; Church and Things Religious, Rev. W. H. Walker; Sound effects, Bugler James Ward.

The play was exceptionally well given and enjoyed by a large congregation with an excellent message for those interested in the problems faced by present day youth.

Mr. Fred Joblin, Former Resident Speaks to Y.P.U.

An interesting feature of the fine program presented at the regular meeting of St. Paul's Young People's Union was the presence of Mr. Fred Joblin, former student of Stirling High School, and now attending Victoria College, Toronto. Addressing the gathering briefly, Mr. Joblin spoke of his experiences in the western mission fields where for the past few years he has been engaged in summer mission work. During the coming years his experience in the ministry will be widened by his association with mission work in the downtown section of Toronto.

The meeting began with a prelude of soft music by Donald Scott and the reading of a poem "The Voice of God is Calling" by the President Don Scott who presided over the devotional part of the meeting. The Scripture lesson was read by John Munro and the President led in prayer. Miss Ruth Murray presented the secretary's report and the remaining portion of the program was directed by Douglas Richardson convener of the Citizenship department who also presented the topic of the evening "Beckoning Frontiers" taken from the Association's Study Book. At the conclusion of the fine address dealing principally with the problems faced by the Christian Church on the Western Frontiers, Mr. Donald Thompson offered a vocal selection playing his own accompaniment on the guitar. Miss Marietta McKee contributed a piano solo. Also during the meeting Miss Atkinson director of music led in the singing of several hymns from the New Bay of Quinte Y.P.U. song sheets.

This part of the meeting closed with the benediction and in the recreation period which followed the president directed an interesting signature contest.

THE GOLDEN GIRL

—by—

Agnes Louise Provost and Ladbroke Black

He tiptoed back across the room and opened a closed door. He always kept a travelling bag there ready for week end trips on sharper emergencies. Taking it out he went over to the safe, opened it and began softly sorting out packages to drop into the waiting bag. Ready money, securities, anything that now or later could be converted into cash.

He worked rapidly and silently. One of the Italian steamers was scheduled to sail about two. He would catch that, while the people at the other end of those dictaphone wires waited for him at the Grandon.

"We'll go up now."

"How about the Grandon appointment?"

"I think it was a plant. Gorham's voice was clearer then than it had been at any time although his telephone is on the other side of the room from the dictaphone. I've a hunch he has seen something to scare him. Want to come along, Jack?"

They went out, leaving the poker-faced young man still at the table. Two of the men went toward the elevator and Jack and Murphy took the stairs, going up one flight. Another man from Headquarters was already lounging with apparent aimlessness in the upper corridor near Gorham's door.

X X X

As they reached the top of the stairs Jack caught sight of Frances Payne. In her frightened haste she had evidently taken a wrong turn in the puzzling corridors and was retracing her steps to find the elevator.

"Oh, Jack!" She greeted him with a swift smile.

Murphy went on with unmoved countenance. Jack stopped.

"I think," he said, "that you'd better get away from here as soon as possible. Your friend Gorham has been under police surveillance for weeks and will be under arrest in about ten seconds. There is a dictaphone in his office. I have been downstairs listening to it for the last half an hour. Do you understand, Frances?"

She seemed to shrink and wither. She caught her breath, almost in a sob.

"Jack, don't look at me that way! Let me explain! I had to—things were intolerable—"

"I think you'd better go," he said patiently. Not a muscle of his face had changed. "They may bring him out any minute. I will try to see that your name does not appear. That is all that you can expect of me—or my wife."

In his office, Gorham, kneeling in front of the safe, jerked around at a sudden noise to find himself covered by two revolvers in the hands of watchful men. A third man stood in the door leading into the corridor. A second later Jack appeared.

"Game's up, Gorham—or Harper, if that suits you any better." Murphy rapped it out crisply. "We're taking you for the United Rosario swindle, past and present, and we also have your extradition papers for a hasty little knifing affair in New Orleans. The man died, you may remember."

Gorham shrugged his shoulders callously. "Have it your own way, gentlemen, you are four to one." He tossed his revolver over on the desk. "I suppose you want that. Mind if I smoke?" His hand went toward his coat pocket.

"When we're through looking you over," said Murphy grimly. "Up with your hands."

Gorham complied with a shrug, but his right hand was loosely closed.

"May I ask," he said slowly, "how you acquired so much interesting information?"

"The lady you have been discussing," vouchsafed Murphy, "was smart enough to set private detectives on your track. They watched Parsons, and caught you. Open that fist.

Gorham opened it, leaning heavily against the safe. A small metallic object clattered to the floor.

"A little thing I picked up in India," he explained drowsily as they rushed to him. "You're too late, Murphy—I always said I'd never be caught."

Two men caught him as he collapsed. He opened dragging eyelids.

"Parsons did the dirty work—I furnished the brains. It was good work—if only that girl—"

His roving glance fell on Jack.

"My regards to Mrs. Moreland," he said thickly. "Tell her—she wins."

After that he lay still.

CHAPTER XXVIII

A taxicab dashed up to the Ritz and Jack Moreland jumped out and went past the doorkeeper with an impatient rush. At the desk the clerk shook his head with exasperating calmness.

"Miss Staunton is out of town. She gave up her rooms by telephone this morning."

"I'll talk to her maid if she is still here," Jack said.

"She doesn't seem to be." The clerk relaxed into the human weakness of a grin. "I suspect that she is joy-riding with the good-looking chauffeur. We have a message for her to have Miss Staunton's trunks at the Grand Central tomorrow, but she hasn't returned yet."

Jack wandered off restlessly. He ransacked his mind for people who might know of Gloria's whereabouts. Then he bolted into the nearest telephone booth and called Sophie Dahmler.

Sophie was at home and obligingly confidential.

"Glory Staunton? Why, no, Jack, I thought she was at the Ritz, as usual. I saw her on Monday and we had tea together. I told her what you were doing, and she seemed so interested."

"Thanks," he said absently, and smothered a groan. Gloria had tried to see him the very next day! What a beast he had been! A moment later he called the Granliden Apartments.

No, Mrs. Moreland was not there. She had been there about a month ago. At least, the operator supposed it was Mrs. Moreland. Two ladies had come one afternoon, one a little before the other. The first was a blonde, and the other was little and dark. He remembered it particularly because it was the same day as the Endicott murder and he had wondered if that Moreland was any relation.

Jack jammed the receiver on its hook and sat for a moment staring at it. If he was to see her at all there was nothing to do but to go to the Grand Central the next day and wait for her to appear in that hurrying crowd.

Half an hour later Morton, the manager at the Garrett-Hudson salesrooms, looked up to see him in the doorway.

"Time you turned up," he admonished him. "There's been a telephone call waiting for you all day. It seems to be urgent."

"Message for Moreland from Miss Dalton. Come at once to Beechwood. Very important."

What could be wrong at Beechwood? It was not even his any more. And what was Miss Dalton doing there still?

"I shall have to go at once," he said abruptly, and in the next moment was out of the door.

X X X

Her course once decided upon, Gloria was anxious to get the inevitable wrench over as soon as possible. She arranged a myriad humdrum necessary details about Beechwood, about the apartment at the Granliden, about other things and people. Sara undertook them all.

"Sara, you are wonderful. But after all, I'd rather have you come with me, or join me later. Won't you?"

"Maybe," said Sara enigmatically, "I'll see. But I'd rather be housekeeper at Beechwood than dawdle around any number of expensive hotels. I'm a worker, Glory. It's in my bones."

Even humdrum details come to an end, and Gloria found herself idle again with two long hours still before train time. Sara, strangely restless for that efficient person, was busy in some other part of the house. Gloria slipped out for one more look at Beechwood before it should become a memory.

She was thinking of the half ghostly yet very real figure she had seen in the moonlight the night before. Why had Jack been there and at that hour? She had not forgotten that his agent had reserved a few acres and an old building near the village in selling Beechwood, and she decided to do a little exploring.

She left the open road and turned into a path which led through the magnificent grove of beeches which had given the Endicott place its name.

Out of the beech grove and across meadows that Jack had meant some day to turn into a golf course; through another wooded strip, with the lullaby of the little river in her ears. Then she came suddenly upon the old mill.

Why did Jack want it? What did he mean to do with it? The door was open a few inches. She pushed it a little farther and squeezed in, half fearfully. It rasped on its sagging hinges and Gloria started at the sharp sound in the afternoon stillness.

In a shadowy corner behind a confused pile of lumber a recumbent figure stirred, sat up and peered with suspicious eyes through a gap in the loosely piled boards. The eyes glittered avidly, the loose lips slid into an evil grin.

Gloria walked about daintily, picking her way around clumsy obstructions, and behind the lumber pile an unkempt head turned slowly, following her movements.

Where the sunlight streamed she saw streaks along an old bench, as if something had recently disturbed the thickly settled dust there. She bent over it, poking with a fastidious forefinger at something that she saw.

Only a few shreds of tobacco, and on the floor back of the bench, half hidden by a projecting board, a little rectangle of stiff paper. There was something written on the back of it, too, looking up at her in the slanting band of sunshine that streamed through one of the windows.

"Gloria. May 10,1936."

She reached for it with a little gasp of astonishment. It was her own picture on the lawn at Beechwood with Kelly coaxing her to play with him. Jack must have snapped it unknown to her. And it lay there, lost or discarded, in the dust of the deserted mill.

With heart beating a little faster and cheeks flushed Gloria raised her head—to look into a pair of evil watching eyes and a bloated face slowly nearing her own.

She jerked back with a stifled scream, stifled because of the quick threatening movement that it brought.

"Easy, now! I'm a nice pleasant fella when ye strike me the right way, but I don't like noise. Hurts my ears and makes me nasty. See?"

"What right have you in here? Let me pass at once!"

"Oh, don't be in a hurry!"

He chuckled and drew nearer. She drew away from him as far as she could frozen with fear. Who would hear her if she could scream before his loathsome hands choked her into silence? The nearest house in the village was an eighth of a mile away.

Sara saw that rolling cloud of yellow dust sweeping down along the main highway from the city. She was watching for just such a sight, peering anxiously from an upper window. Already she had given Simmons orders to have the Beechwood gates open, and she was down almost as soon as the roadster swept through and drew up in front of the house. Jack Moreland was out of the car and half way up the steps to meet her.

"How do you do, Miss Dalton? I came as soon as I got your message. What is the trouble?"

"Glory," said Sara Dalton bluntly. "Things are happening, but before I tell you I want to know what she means to you. You can tell me. I know you are married and why."

She saw him wince just as Gloria winced when Jack's name was mentioned. But he had no opportunity to answer. Old Simmons, the gardener, was hurrying across the lawn with a small towheaded youngster at his heels.

"Miss Dalton, I think I'll be takin' the wood road to the old mill to find Miss Staunton. I see her startin' off that way for a walk and Jimmy here—"

"They's tramps there!" interrupted Jimmy importantly. "I see'n awful lookin' one there this mornin'. Skinney Connors, he says they sleep all the time in th' old mill."

"Which way did she go?" Jack turned so quickly that Simmons jumped.

"Oh, it's Mr. Jack! Why, the path through the beech grove, but I ain't sure where she went. You see, Miss Gloria—"

But Jack was gone. On foot, of necessity, since she had gone by the woodland path.

Sara watched him running. She had not had time to tell him what she knew.

CHAPTER XXIX

Slowly Gloria shrank back, rigid with horror. The tramp reached out a grimy hand, his eyes on a costly pin that she wore, sapphires and diamonds.

"Don't touch me!" She tried to jerk away from the clutch of his hand, but he merely grunted.

"You'll fight me, will ye? We'll see—"

"Stop that!"

Through the doorway a man came swiftly. The tramp jerked around to face him and crashed down like a fallen log. Dizzy with the fall he struggled to rise again, but someone was on his chest, a cyclone of a man jerked him to his knees and swung him about like a steel crane.

"Get up!"

"See here, boss, I didn't mean—"

"You won't mean anything when I get through with you!" Close-snapped words with a fist behind them. "Now get out of here before I land you in jail. Get out!"

The badly punished tramp scrambled to his feet, made for the door and went down the road on a lurching run. Jack watched him, taking no chances. Then he came back hatless and a little disheveled to where Gloria stood watching him with shining eyes.

"You're not hurt?" he demanded, and at something in his tone with its roughness of anxiety her eyes brimmed treacherously.

"No, I'm not hurt. But if you had not come—Oh, Jack!"

That was all, after months of misunderstanding. But the last word was a smothered wail against his shoulder and he was holding her close, his face against hers, murmuring husky endearments.

"Glory, is it true? Do you mean it? Darling, look at me!"

With one hand under her chin he tilted her face upward until he could look into her eyes. Her lips quivered sensitively.

"I do mean it!" she whispered. "Oh, Jack, I've wanted you so!"

Silence in the old mill, with its dust and shadows and its quaint dismantled looms, and the golden bands of sunlight stealing in from the west windows. The warm air scented from the woods mingled with the odor of the ancient beams.

Jack raised his head and looked at her with the adorable flush on her cheeks and the dreaming wonder in her eyes.

"Glory, I can't believe it yet. I am afraid to let you go for a second for fear you will float up on one of those sunbeams and melt out of sight."

"I haven't the slightest intention of riding on a sunbeam," she declared scornfully. "I have a husband to look after and I am going to stay right here."

"You blessed dear! You might begin," he hinted, "by telling me what you are doing at Beechwood and why Miss Dalton is here."

"I couldn't bear to see your home go, Jack!"

"So you bought it in! It was just like you. I don't mind admitting now that it did sting to think of Beechwood going into the hands of strangers. I might have known you would do it, only—I had given you up so completely. You were angelic to me on that beastly day when you found me by the quarry, but when the weeks went by and I didn't hear a word from you I thought you must be glad of a chance to wash your hands of me. You see, I was feeling pretty down on my luck just then."

"But, Jack, I did write! I wrote twice. I wanted so much to come to you, but I couldn't after you went with the Dickersons. I knew Mrs. Dickerson would not let me see you. You see, it sounds dreadfully petty, but once I offended her dreadfully. She made up a yachting party especially to have some of her friends meet me, although I didn't know that until later, and at the last moment I found that one of her guests was to be Wayne Gorham and I sent my regrets."

Jack was leaning forward slightly with eyes on the floor and his mouth a little stern. "I am sorry about those letters. Something — must have happened to them. But don't let any thought of Gorham disturb you. He will never trouble you again."

He told her what had happened, leaving out no detail except that interview between Gorham and Frances Payne to which he had listened in angry amazement over the dictaphone. Gloria shuddered.

"It was horrible. I could almost be sorry for him. I am too happy to want anybody to die like that."

"Dearest, it was the easiest way out for him. He was a professional crook, living by his wits and at other peoples' expense, and he had a bad criminal record."

She raised both hands to his browned thin face and stroked it pitifully.

"Oh, Jack when I think of what you have suffered! And while you were there—before they let you free, you know, I almost went mad thinking what might happen to you and longing to come and share it with you, only I did not dare because I had promised, and because Frances—"

She stopped, but already his face had sobered quickly.

"What did Frances say?"

"That the appearance of an unacknowledged wife at that time would only complicate your position by turning public opinion against you. She had found out about us, you know. And oh, my dear, I already had taken so much from you in my blind selfishness that I was afraid to stir or whisper for fear some action of mine might harm you."

"Darling, we've both been through the fires. I took a long chance that my wife would learn to love me, and more than once I thought I had lost out, but it is all right now. Do smile again —a real Glory smile....That's better. Now tell me how it is that I catch a lovely lady trespassing on the property of the Moreland Motor Company?"

"The what? Or, Jack, tell me!"

"Not until you own up."

"Well, tyrant, I saw you last night crossing the meadow next to Beechwood in the moonlight. I might have thought I was dreaming if Kelly hadn't recognized you. And then I remembered that when the agent sold Beechwood to Mr. Carver he held out a few acres and an old mill, and so I came here just because it was yours. Incidentally, I found a lady's photograph and I wish it explained at once!"

She produced the snapshot, a little crumpled now, and held it off at arm's length. "I'll let you have it when you tell me about the Moreland Motor Company."

"It's a long story, dearest." His eyes twinkled. "You see, once upon a time a lovely girl gave me her candid opinion of the kind of a sponging loafer I was. It was true, Glory, and it did me good. The very next day I started to comb the city for an opportunity to break into high finance, but nobody wanted me so I took the only thing I could get, which was the job in McGilvary's Garage. Then, when I realized how preposterously rich my wife was, I threw up my mechanic's job in disgust, went to Porterfield and took another in the Emmons Automobile Works. Still sticking to cars you see, but by that time I had in the back of my bean a big idea that some day I would make cars myself. I simply had to make cars. So I plugged away at the factory by day and at night I tinkered and fussed in an old shed, working out my engine with a little idea all my own that is now on file in the Patent Office at Washington, D. C. in the name of one John Moreland. And that is all, except that when the estate went to pieces I got a little setback, but held on to this place for my beginning. It is not much to look at, but it's solid and weather tight, and it represents the first home, may it please you, of the to-be-famous Moreland car."

"Oh, I think it is wonderful!" Gloria gave his arm an excited little squeeze. "I am so proud of you! And, Jack—"

Get More Oxygen In Your Blood and Get the Pep that Sends You Bounding Up the Stairs

People who smother to death die because oxygen has been completely cut off from them. Just as surely you are slowly smothering if your blood lacks red corpuscles. Red corpuscles are your oxygen-carriers. They carry the oxygen you breathe in to every part of your system. Without enough oxygen-carrying corpuscles, your kidneys, liver, stomach and bowels slow down. Your skin gets pale, flabby, often pimply. Your nerves may become jittery—you tire quickly—feel depressed.

What you need is Dr. Williams Pink Pills. These world-famous pills help make more and better red corpuscles and thus increase the oxygen-carrying power of your blood. Get Dr. Williams Pink Pills today at your druggist. See for yourself how quickly this time-proven blood-builder will help give you back your pep. Copr. 1938, G. T. Fulford Co., Ltd.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 27—(CP)—Trading on Toronto stock exchange today dried up to just about record volume and only 140,000 shares changed hands in the first three hours. Despite the lack of buyers prices displayed more strength than weakness. Industrial and mining indices showed gains at noon and the western oils were unchanged.

The market appeared to be waiting for Hitler's speech tomorrow. Most of the senior issues that might be influenced by New York and London trends were avoided. Bell Telephone was in moderate demand at a half-point gain to 175. Steels, foods and utilities were steady.

The big base metals, including Nickel, Smelters and Noranda, posted minor gains. In the western oils Home was the only gainer while Davies and Dalhousie were slightly lower.

NEW YORK STOCKS

New York, April 27.—(AP) — Strength of aircrafts gave the stock market a cheerful appearance today and gains ran to around two points for favorites.

Dealings were fairly active in the forenoon, but subsequently slackened to a ripple. Prices were under the best near the final hour. Transfers were about 500,000 shares.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Apr. 27 (CP)—Bacon-hog markets steadied a little today after an almost general price decline yesterday. Losses of 25-35 cents were posted at Brantford and Stratford but other markets were unchanged.

Dressedweights — Hamilton $10.70, Hull $11, Kitchener $9.70, London $10.45, Stratford $10, Peterborough $10.40.

Steady Prices for Produce at Toronto

Toronto, April 27.—Steady prices prevailed in all lines on the Toronto open produce market yesterday, according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Buying showed some improvement on the butter market, and a slightly firmer undertone was evident. Business volume was sufficient to clear receipts, but not brisk enough to lift the market, although supplies of 38 score butter were not too plentiful. Ontario creamery solids traded at 20 3-4c for No. 1 grades and 20c for 38 score. Regraded lots sold at discount prices. Prints moved through retail channels at the unchanged prices of 22 1-2c to 23c for top grades and 21 3-4c to 22 1-4c for 38 score.

Receipts arrived in ample volume to cover requirements on the egg market. Trading maintained a quiet pace throughout the day, with little forward buying for storage apparent. Graded shipments closed at the previous rates of 21c for grade A-large, 19 1-2c for medium 18 1-2c for pullets and B's and 18c for C grades.

Montreal Butter, Eggs Ease

Montreal, April 27—(CP)—Quebec butter and egg prices eased fractionally but other offerings generally held steady on open produce markets here, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Creamery butter prints to retailers sold for 22 1-2c a pound, and solids for 22c.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold for 22c to 22 1-2c a dozen for A large, 20c to 20 1-2c for A medium, 19c for A pullets, 20c for B large, and 18 1-2c for C. Receipts—2,711 cases.

Heinz Co. to Build Large Addition to Leamington Factory

Leamington, Ont., April 27—H. J. Heinz Company has prepared plans for another large addition to its factory here.

The proposed structure is planned as a one-story warehouse for finished products and will be 200 x 240 feet. It will be constructed of steel and concrete and have the same architectural treatment as the present group of buildings that form the Leamington plant. A bridge will be constructed between this building and present warehouses.

It is estimated that eight weeks will be required to complete the structure and it is planned to have it ready for use before the tomato harvest.

The Heinz factory here is the world's largest ketchup establishment and 57 Varieties of food products are produced. A large percentage of the output is shipped abroad and is an important factor in the Dominion's export trade.

This is the 30th anniversary of the erection of the factory. In recent years additions have been made almost annually and it now has a capacity that requires the crops of a large acreage and creates a market for many farmers in this district.

Large Stone Drops Thru Roof of Car

When a dynamite blast was set off by workmen, employed at levelling the old Kyle House property yesterday, the force of the blast flung large pieces of rock high into the air, one large stone dropping through the roof of an automobile parked nearby. Fortunately the vehicle was not occupied when the small boulder crashed through the top of the vehicle.

The blasting operations were in charge of Ben Simpson, Belleville, while the automobile is owned by Albert Grummett, Ottawa. Police were notified of the incident, P.C. Evans investigating and warning the workmen, that more precaution must be taken to protect the lives and property of others during the blasting in the future.

"It is fortunate there was no person in the parked car. If that large rock had crashed through the roof and struck an occupant, serious injury would have resulted" reported the officer to his superiors.

Farmer, With Bare Hands, Catches An 8 Pound Pike

You can have your high-priced fishing tackle, your ten dollar reels, and rods and costly paraphernalia for extracting the finny beauties from their natural habitants. In fact Ross Valleau, Massassaga resident, even disdains to use the time-honored schoolboy apparatus of a sapling, line and bent pin. As long as he has two hands he apparently won't lack for fish dinners.

For the other day while investigating fishing possibilities along the shore at Massassaga he noticed a large fish lying quietly in the water. Lazily moving its tail, it did not note its danger. Quick as a flash Valleau plunged his hands into the water, and came up with a struggling eight-pound pike.

Lower Tax Rate Predicated on No Big Civic Expenditures

Unless "unforeseen contingencies" arise in the meantime, there is no reason why Belleville tax payers cannot be given a substantial reduction in the tax rate again this year, it is stated by Mayor Jamieson Bone this morning.

One of the contingencies, it was pointed out, would be the building of the new addition to Queen Mary School which at present is reported badly overcrowded, and for which addition application has been made by the Board of Education to city council for some time past. A deputation of the School Board will again approach council at its regular committee meeting this evening to further press this appeal for building the addition.

One other matter will be the purchase of a new pumper for the city fire department to replace the present antiquated and outmoded equipment, which has been in use so long, that it is reported too expensive to repair. This afternoon a demonstration was scheduled to be held at No. 1 Fire Hall of the new equipment, the purchase of which will be seriously debated by council.

FORESTRY DEPT. BUYS SMALL PLOT OF JACK PINE AT MT. VIEW

Acquisition of a small plot of jack-pine on the farm of W. Post, Mountain View for experimental purposes by the Department of Lands and Forests, Ontario, was announced recently by R. S. Carman, chief forester of the department.

The pine, planted a few years ago will be cared for by the department the announcement stated.

Ten thousand applications for trees for reforestation purposes have been received from the farmers of the province, Mr. Carman stated, adding it was an increase by two thousand over the number submitted a year ago.

The trees which are being grown at the Sandbanks nursery will not be available for distribution for two weeks owing to the lateness of the season.

The first batch of conscripts, expected to number 200,000, will find uniforms and equipment ready for them. It is understood that sufficient equipment already is stored for them in depots throughout the country.

J. W. Dulanty, High Commissioner for Eire, saw Prime Minister Chamberlain this morning and was understood to have discussed the status of Irishmen living in Britain under the conscription measure.

Lay In Iron Rations.

Sir Arthur Salter, Independent member of parliament, told a nutrition conference that London families living in areas scheduled for evacuation should lay in "iron rations" against a possible emergency.

He estimated that extra stocks of different foods equivalent to the food value of one year's supply of wheat for the United Kingdom could be provided at a total annual cost of about $23,400,000 or "about one per cent of four defence expenditure".

Robert Boothby, Conservative member of parliament, planned to ask Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons on May 1 whether the forthcoming National Training Bill will empower the government to apply it to classes beyond the age of 20 if it is considered necessary.

Workers in "the city" had a vivid reminder of defence preparations as air raid sirens were tested today. The warbling note sounding the alarm was followed after a few minutes by a steady note to indicate the raiders had passed.

kans and eastern Europe—either for Britain and France, or for Germany and Italy.

The positions of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria were considered uncertain here, the former because she is hemmed in by Italy and Germany and the latter because she has territorial grievances with Rumania as well as other Balkan powers.

Black Sea Pact

(Political circles in Rumania said they believed Russia was interested in having Rumania yield to Bulgaria's demands for return of a large part of the Dobrudja area as a step toward the goal of a "Black Sea" pact of mutual assistance, non-aggression and economic cooperation which would include Bulgaria along with Russia, Rumania and Turkey.

(The report arose over the trip of Vladimir Potemkin, Soviet Assistant Commissar of Foreign Affairs, to Turkey, by way of the Bulgarian capital. Bulgarian newspapers were permitted to republish foreign reports of her claims against Rumania, as well as for a corridor through Thrace, now Greek territory, to the Aegean Sea. Speculation concerning territorial claims against Yugoslavia, however, was not permitted.)

France and Britain have extended one-way assistance pledges to Rumania and Greece, in addition to the mutual pledges with Poland. They would like the Rumanian and Greek pledges to be made reciprocal. They also are disposed to aid Rumania with armaments and credits to resist German economic penetration.

PREPARATIONS FOR

The attitude of the controlled newspapers was that Britain may "arm up to the neck" if she wishes. Propaganda Minister Paul Goebbels wrote a lengthy article in Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter attacking Britain's policy of a balance of power in Europe, and declaring:

"Germany is no English protectorate and the English would do well to conduct their dealings with us in the way in which dealings with a big power are generally conducted."

Preparations were underway to ensure that every German, even those in the smallest village, would be able to hear the Fuehrer answer President Roosevelt's proposal for non-aggression guarantees. Workers were busy stringing wires and setting up loudspeakers on the streets and public squares, and in theatres, Nazi community houses and party headquarters throughout the country.

Highly Decorated

The opera house, scene of the speech, will be given a decorating "worthy of the occasion." The Reich's stage decorator, Benno von Arent, was entrusted with the task. Walls of greenery will shroud the whole building and form a background for huge black Swastika flags.

A spokesman commenting on Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech on conscription made the sarcastic comment, "you probably can train men to use umbrellas in six months, but you can not train them for modern warfare within that time."

The Berliner Lokal Anzeiger termed the measure "a political and agitating action of the Chamberlain encirclement cabinet." Continuing, the paper said: "England may arm up to the neck, she may call in all her lords and all her stock jobbers ....all this will leave us cold. We do not want to attack England, and that England can not attack us, despite Anthony Eden, Winston Churchill and other preventive warriors, the Fuehrer has taken care."

STEP TO REASSURE

Conscription of wealth would have been a much more effective gesture, Mr. Attlee said.

The Prime Minister said he foresaw that the Labor party might push things to the point where he compelled to call an election and added, "but surely a very heavy responsibility would rest upon those who force such a conclusion at this time."

Mr. Chamberlain said it was of "national importance" for parliament to decide tonight on the principle involved, a remark which indicated the government was considering the conscription move in relation to Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech tomorrow.

A vote tonight on the government's motion favoring conscription would be regarded as a test of strength.

Doesn't Think War Imminent

"I do not want to give the idea that I think war is imminent," the Prime Minister said. "I don't. But I do think that we are in a condition when a very little weight one way or another might decide whether war is going to come or not."

Times are difficult and dangerous, he said, and call for abnormal government policies.

The voluntary system of recruitment was not meeting army requirements, the Prime Minister disclosed. Britain had assumed great liabilities by giving guarantees to Poland, Rumania and Greece and if they were to become effective, he said, "we must inspire confidence in the countries to which we gave them that we mean to carry them through to the end."

Solid Front Jeopardized

Doubts were being cast all through Europe on Britain's sincerity and ability to redeem her pledges. The whole effort to build up a solid front against aggression was being jeopardized by these doubts, gibes and taunts.

The Prime Minister warned the world in general not to undervalue "this great departure by this country from one of its most cherished traditions."

He said he was sure Britain's adoption of a modified form of conscription would bring encouragement, comfort and belief "to all our freinds in Europe."

Election Would Cause Confusion

Mr. Chamberlain said:

"An election would leave the country in a state of confusion and uncertainty, postpone for what might be vital weeks measures which the government thought necessary, check the output of munitions so vital to us at this time and distract the attention of those who are responsible for government departments."

Defending himself against Labor charges that the government had broken its pledge not to introduce conscription in peacetime, Mr. Chamberlain said:

"On those two occasions (when he opposed conscription) conditions were very different from what they are today. On neither was war imminent and there was no question present to the minds of anybody at that time which appeared then likely to lead to war."

Says Conscription Required

The Prime Minister explained the government agreed to conscription because of the pledges given recently to guarantee the independence of Poland, Greece and Rumania.

He said doubts had been expressed that the British government "meant business" and "evidence has been accumulating rapidly during the last week that these doubts were increasing as we were increasing our engagements and the gibe that Britain was ready to fight to the last Frenchman was one which was being bandied about from capital to capital."

The government had intended to maintain the voluntary system as recently as last month, Mr. Chamberlain said, recalling he had made a statement to that effect to Clement Attlee, Labor leader, March 29.

"I Have Changed My Mind"

"Since then I have changed my mind. ....Today we no longer believe the needs of the country can be met by a voluntary system if that system is to stand alone."

The Prime Minister assailed David Lloyd George, wartime Prime Minister, who indicated through a question yesterday that he believed the government's conscription measure was not broad enough.

"I have noticed that it is the fixed practice of the right honorable gentleman (Lloyd George)," Mr. Chamberlain said, "to be little and pour contempt upon everything that this government are doing. The further in time the government get from the period when he himself was Prime Minister, the worse they get in his estimation."

To Realize Profiteering

"In the view of the government, if war ever did come again, we feel that taxes on the very wealthy, which are already very high, must be further and substantially increased.

"We feel that profiteering in war time, wherever it can be established, should be subjected to severe penalties."

The Prime Minister said that if his conscription statement had been delayed until next week, any decision taken would have been related to Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech.

Proposals Independent

"We have no information as to what the contents of that speech may be; our proposals are quite independent of it and that should be made perfectly clear to all the world."

Meanwhile, Earl Stanhope moved in the House of Lords a resolution similar to that of the Prime Minister. The first Lord of the Admiralty received cheers when he announced the resolution—an unusual reception in the staid Upper House.

"So far from being accused of breach of faith, we should have been accused of a breach of duty had we flinched from the steps we propose," he said.

"The days are gone by for anyone to rely on collective security on paper, security which has neither reality nor force."

Pittsburg Pirates' Brig is Sinking Fast as Team Loses Six of its Last Seven Games

Club is Not Hitting and Pitchers Fail to go Route

PHILLIES SECOND

Hank Greenberg Hits Two Homers as Detroit Downs St. Louis

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer).

Pipe the life boats, mateys. Pittsburgh Pirates' brig is sinking again.

It now develops the Buccaneers' craft didn't go to the bottom last September, when the seams came apart and it resigned the National Baseball League pennant by dropping six of its last seven games. Instead the team has lost six successive contests since winning this season's inaugural fro mCincinnati.

Although they outhit Chicago Cubs yesterday in losing 3-1, the Pirates are batting as though they are all pitchers. Rookie Fern Bell has a fancy .444 figure, but the best mark among the regulars is Johnny Rizzo's .304.

In seven games not a single pitcher has lasted the route and the defensive play hasn't always been up to par.

The Pirates' place in the cellar isn't the only cock-eyed angle to the present National League race, because Philadelphia Phillies are in second and got there yesterday without even playing. Their game with New York Giants was rained out along with the contest between Boston Bees and Brooklyn Dodgers. So the 1-0 shutout St. Louis Cardinals administered to Cincinnati Reds on the five-hit flinging of Curt Davis was sufficient to move the Phillips past the Reds in the standings.

The eastern games in the American League also were rained out, but the western clubs put on a good show. Detroit Tigers nosed out St. Louis Browns 7-6 in 10 innings in a game featured by seven home runs,of which two came from Hank Greenberg.

Bill Dietrich nearly got a shutout as Chicago White Sox Beat Cleveland Indians 5-1, but a single and a double in the last of the ninth gave the Tribe a tally.

Good Courses and Use of Sand Wedge Helping Stars

(By Gayle Talbot Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, April 26 (AP)—Though he's celebrating this summer the 25th anniversary of his first United States open golf triumph, Walter Hagen still gets the light of battle in his eyes at the suggestion there is a new breed of "super-golfer" treading the fairways these days.

The Haig thinks he and the Bobby Jones of a decade ago could have trimmed the current crop of hot-shots, with their stroke-saving sand wedges, their "40-mile" golf balls and their manicured courses that never give a bad lie.

"Do I think Bobby and I could have held our own in a series with Ralph Guldahl and Sammy Snead?" gasped Walter. "Why, I'll tell you what. If Bobby would be willing to take off a year from business right now and get himself in shape for a match with those fellows, I would do it, too — no fooling."

Little Better Average

"Sure, they're shooting a little better average scores than Bobby and I did in our prime," he conceded. "But that doesn't mean anything. This sand wedge they're using now is enough to account for the difference by itself, not to mention that the modern ball rolls 30 or 40 yards further than when Bobby and I were winning our championships.

"Why, when I think of the ability Jones had in those days and the confidence I had, I don't see how any of these kids could have beaten us.

Don't Have to be Scared

"With this sand wedge the kids don't have to be scared of traps. After knocking their drives a country mile they can shoot right at the pin with their seconds every time. So they get lots of short putts and lots of birdies. They know if they do hit a trap they still can scrape the ball out with their wedge and probably get a par, anyhow.

"It took nerve when Bobby and I shot at the pin when there were traps only a few yards in front of it. We knew if we fell short we had lost two or three strokes, maybe a tournament, because there wasn't any scraping the ball out."

ANOTHER STEP FOR MONTY

Not an active player but one of baseball's outstanding figures in recent months has been Monty Stratton, former Chicago White Sox pitcher, who had his leg amputated following a gunshot wound last fall, but always smiling, vowed he'd be back in there some day. A new season finds Monty, ABOVE, part way there anyway, coaching the Sox from the sidelines.

ANGLERSPREPARE FOR OPENING DAY OF TROUT SEASON

CASTING TOURNEY

All Classes Will Compete at Armouries on Wednesday

Anticipating a prolific season at their favorite diversion, fishing, the Belleville Anglers' Club held their final spring meeting prior to the opening of the trout season on Saturday, at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. Arrangements for the club's annual casting tournament at the armouries on May 3rd. were announced, as well as the season's prize fishing contests.

Moving pictures of angling were shown, depicting salmon, maskinonge and bass fishing in northern waters. President J. E. Shortt made several announcements, including the much-publicized advancement of the opening of the trout season, to be advanced from May 1st to Saturday, April 29th. A large number of the anglers present indicated they intended to take full advantage of the advanced date for the angling for speckled, brown and Aurora trout. Following the meeting the members adjourned to the armouries for an hour of casting practice previous to the club's annual casting tournament next week.

Three Classes

Chairman Fred Croft, of the casting committee, announced there would be three classes of casters, senior, intermediate and the beginners class. Prizes for the most competetent casters in each group will be awarded the winners and the respective champions declared.

Mr. Croft also added the club would donate a prize to the club member catching the largest speckled trout during the opening week end of trout fishing commencing Saturday. The customary prizes for the season's largest catch in trout, large and small mouthed bass, pickerel, pike, salmon trout and landlock salmon will be in vogue and conducted as in former years. All prize-winning catches must be registered with the club, according to weight, length and other requirements of the contest. Valuable prizes in each class have been donated by enthusiastic members of the Belleville Anglers' Club.

JERSEY GIANTS MOVING ALONG

(By The Associated Press)

The job of piloting a Major League ball club is a strenuous one and allows little time for outside interests. It must be a great satisfaction to Bill Terry, therefore, whenever he takes a few minutes away from his New York Giants, to note how well Bert Niehoff is running affairs of the Jersey City International League Club, the Giants' No. 1 farm.

Terry cleaned house thoroughly in Jersey City after the team finished seventh last season and it appears his efforts may bear fruit. The club has won both its opening series, two games to one, and faces a chance to take over the lead as it opens another three-game set with the first-place Montreal Royals today.

While rain and wet grounds cancelled the rest of the program, the Royals were hauled down within half a game of the Jerseys yesterday as they dropped a 2-1, 11-inning decision to Syracuse Chiefs. Catcher Chris Hartje poled out a homer in the fourth to put Royals in the lead but the Chiefs, behind Ted Kleinhans' steady nine-hit pitching, tied the score in the ninth and put over the winning counter two frames later with a rally started by Manager Dick Porter.

CALLING 'EM

with Ken J. Colling

On Tuesday the local Kiwanis Club voted to turn over all equipment of the two city playgrounds into the custody of the Board of Education. The Kiwanis Club spent something like $5,000 or more on this equipment, which they now have presented to the Board of Education in the interests of recreation among the teen-aged children of the city throughout the summer months. Originally we were of the opinion that additional equipment would be added to the two playgrounds each year until a complete array of such equipment would be attained. When the Kiwanis Club provided this equipment in the first place it was a real SERVICE to the community, but will the Board of Education be so situated as to replenish or add to this equipment in years to come? The Kiwanis members took a pointed interest in the success and welfare of the playgrounds and kiddies, while they were custodians of the playground equipment. In the future, however, all such interest will have to be provided by the Board of Education and its employees.

We doubt if we ever saw so many faces registering intense expectation as were seen at last night's Anglers Club meeting. The club members' 'mugs' were beaming with delight at the hopes of getting out rod and reel and angling for those finny beauties come Saturday. When the announcement was recently made that the season for brown, speckled and Aurora trout would be advanced from May 1st to April 29th, the local disciples of Izaac Walton just could not wait for the big day. However, it is less than 48 hours away at the time of reading so no doubt Joe Shortt's henchmen will do little sleeping from now until Saturday. Although the paramount subject at last night's Anglers' meeting learned optimistically to trout fishing, time was taken not to announce the casting tournament next Wednesday and also that prizes would be given for the largest trout caught by club members over the week end.

Larry Gains, vetrean Canadian negro heavyweight and Tommy Farr, the Welsh wonder (it's a wonder how he stood up at times) signed yesterday for a bout at Cardiff, Wales on May 17th next.

Do you remember when Tony Canzoneri retained his world lightweight championship at Chicago eight years ago last night, with a third-round decision over Jack (Kid) Berg, British challenger. It was Berg's first defeat in 27 rounds, but he later lost to Barney Ross, a year before the latter won the welter title in 1933.

Apparently we never know when we've had enough, or when to say 'uncle'. President J. W. Scott, of the O.B.A., appointed us to the executive of the Ontario Baseball Association, recently only to add to our headaches. However, with "Sandy" Burrows on the O.H.A. executive and your correspondent on the O.B.A. executive sports should at least get a break around the Quinte shores for a year or two. Our work as O.B.A. executive member naturally is in the interest of all clubs and leagues throughout Eastern Ontario and any service we can render towards the advancement of the game will be at the service of those desirous and at their beck and call. Just a servant of the people and an appointment with plenty of cares and tribulations attached.

Bud Wilkins, veteran Belleville hurler, and Russ Collins, were elected as players' representatives to the executive of the Belleville Baseball Club by team mates, who met at the "Y" last night. Plenty of enthusiasm was shown by the players, who reported some 27 players had been approached and who had signified their intentions playing baseball in Belleville this year. "Youth must be served is our motto this year," announced Wilkins as he stated today" the feeling of the players was that the younger element of ball players had not been given a fair trial or opportunity in past years. "The players feel the time is at hand to replace the veterans with young blood. There are plenty of young players around town, who have refrained from trying out with the locals in past years because certain positions were assured the veterans. Such will not be the case this year, as the youngsters will be given the preferance, especially those who attend practice," added Wilkins as he announced the first baseball practice would be held at the Collegiate grounds on Monday evening.

We're telling you that the Cubs and Yankees are still out in front of their respective leagues with the same number of wins and losses... Jean Barriere, of Trenton, won his first bout in the Canadian Amateur boxing finals at Montreal last night, fighting at 126 pounds.... Toronto Leafs didn't lose yesterday —as a matter of fact they didn't even play....Rogers Hornsby, who still holds the National League batting championship top ranking, is 43 today....Toronto Leafs are in urgent need of a couple of slugging outfielders; that's nothing new—so is the Belleville club....Remember Lefty Goldsmith, of Southampton. 'Fishermen' fame, well the tempermental Lefty is in Sarnia aspiring for a mound berth ....They are grooming Sammy Luftspring for the world's welterweight title shot.....They're getting ready for a crowd of at least 100,000 at Wembley Stadium on Saturday for the English Cup final — Wolverhampton versus Portsmouth and we'll string along with the Wanderers, and don't say we didn't warn you.

TRENTON BOXER WIN HIS BOUT

126 Pounder, Jean Barriere, Competing in Dominion Contest

Montreal, April 27 (CP)—Eighteen warriors from different parts of Canada were safely by the first round today in their quest for Dominion Amateur Boxing titles, as officials prepared to send another 30 fighters into action in the second part of the three-night tournament.

Vancouver fighters showed the way with four victories in five starts last night before a crowd of nearly 9,000. Finals will be held either Friday or Saturday.

Three of five champions defending their titles were among last night's winners. Middleweight Joe Ashenbrenner of Vancouver; bantamweight Tony Roberts of Winnipeg and lightweight Frankie Williams of Regina gained decisions in their first-night scraps. Welter champ Gordon Schmaltz of Kitchener, Ont., and heavyweight titleholder Dick Syms of Fort William, Ont., will swing into action tonight.

Ontario had three winners in Jerry Blanchard of Cornwall in the 112-pound group; Jean Barriere of Trenton at 126; and George Pignoli of Toronto at 160. Blanchard defeated Roy Flusher of Sudbury, Ont.; Barriere accounted for Simeon Waithe of Toronto and Pignoli defeated Maxie Spoon of Montreal.

KING IS SHREWD JUDGE OF HORSES IN A PADDOCK

Also Has Fine Record on Court, Links and Range

NATURAL GOLFER

His Majesty Interested in Angling and Also Fine Marksman

(By Jack Brayley Canadian Press Staff Writer).

London, April 27 (CP)—An energetic, slim southpaw with a fine record on court, links, turf and range will travel Canada's open spaces this spring with little opportunity of showing his accomplishments.

Only once on the Royal tour is King George VI attending a sports event, and then only as a spectator. He will watch the running of the King's Plate at Toronto's Woodbine Park May 22. It is a good bet that he will have a good line on the winner if he gets a chance to look over the entrants.

As owner of a well-bred, but so far none too lucky, racing stable of 15 horses, the King has learned to judge thoroughbreds with the best racing men. Members of the Royal family often profited by his predictions delivered after a tour of the paddock and a glance at the parade to the post.

There will be no more shrewd judge of riding ability at Woodbine than the King, whose chief pride has been his success as riding instructor to Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose. In gaiters and tweeds, looking very much the gentleman farmer, the King gives lessons to his daughters in the wooded lanes of Windsor Great Park.

Takes Keen Interest

The King follows his own horses with keenest interest. A Canadian Press writer saw him watch the Derby at Epsom last year. Glasses glued to his eyes and lips moving in unspoken advice to his rider on Licence from the Royal stables, he remained lost to the world.

There was no regal dignity there. His horse was leading at the halfway mark and the King was on his feet, one arm moving piston-like as he led the Royal cheers. But Licence only a sentimental favorite, couldn't stand the pace and failed to respond to the King's enthusiasm.

During his private intervals in the tour of Canada, King George in all probability will get in a game of tennis or golf or have a turn with a rifle, three sports in which he is most proficient. His staff has many memories of his energetic habit of organizing sports programs as relaxation from exhausting social functions.

He was always a good tennis player and once entered the National doubles championships at Wihmbledon with Sir Louis Greig as his partner. They lost in the second round after a creditable showing. Once he won the Royal Air Force championship.

"Natural" Golfer

Described by critics as a "natural" golfer, the King created a mild stir in 1930 during the ceremony of "driving himself in" as captain of the Royal and Ancient Club of St. Andrews with a drive of 260 yards against the wind. Usually this ceremony, looked on as a mere formality, is a flop. There was the case of the Duke of Kent who dubbed his shot two years ago.

A keen fisherman, he has often provided the Queen with her favorite breakfast of fish. He has assumed his father's mantle as an outstanding marksman. The King is no fair weather hunter either. Before dawn, in rain or snow during the bitter British autumn and winter, he pays regular visits to the "blinds" near Sandringham House. He could swap story for story on hunting exploits with grizzled New Brunswick guides.

Football, cricket, aquatics, track and field and lacrosse are among the sports in which he has participated. When the Royal Air Force adopted baseball the King, as a former active office, played a part in its introduction and even played in inter-squadron games.

No More Piles

Get Quick, Pleasant Relief

Probably not one person in ten knows the cause of piles is inside—bad circulation of blood in the lower bowel.

That is the scientific truth about piles and is the real reason why salves and suppositories do not give more than temporary relief—they do not remove the cause.

Your piles can not be relieved until you have corrected the condition which causes them. That is why an internal medicine like HEM-ROID should be used.

HEM-ROID is the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, who early in his professional life made many tests to relieve piles by correcting the cause. His medicine succeeds because it stimulates the circulation, eases the pressure of blood in the veins of the lower bowel and helps to heal and restore the sore, tender parts.

So if you have failed to get the relief you want from your sore, painful piles, and would like to give HEM-ROID a trial, you have our promise to return you money, if just one bottle of this prescription does not give pleasing results. J. S. McKeown or any druggist can supply you with the genuine HEM-ROID.

HOUSE PROROGUES

Before completion of the sitting, the House passed practically all the estimates, totalling approximately $12,500,000. Lieutenant-Governor Albert Matthews will perform the prorogation ceremonies.

The Premier's first remarks concerning Mr. Mackenzie King came during consideration of estimates for the Department of Agriculture. Backing Agriculture Minister Dewan's announced opposition of the federal government's plan of bonusing high-score cheese, Mr. Hepburn declared:

"I'm glad the Minister is sound enough and is not falling for the bait of a dying government at Ottawa," he said.

Cheap Publicity

When T. A. Kidd (Con. Kingston) expressed the opinion Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Dominion Agriculture Minister, was "putting himself out for the farmer" in his plans for agriculture, Mr. Hepburn interjected:

"He's not putting himself out, he's putting himself in."

The reference to the royal tour came up during review of estimates for tourist publicity when Leopold Macaulay (Con. York South) asked the Premier if it was the Ontario Publicity Department which invited Prime Minister Mackenzie King to accompany King George and Queen Elizabeth on their tour of Canada.

Mr. Hepburn told the House he denounced the Prime Minister's intention "in no uncertain terms" and declared it was "cheap publicity."

Asked if he would accompany the tour through Ontario, Mr. Hepburn replied: "No, I don't think it would be safe for Mr. King and myself to be so close together." He ended the matter with the opinion Lord Tweedsmuir, "who enjoys the respect and confidence of the people of Canada, was the proper person to accompany Their Majesties.

Defended Cuts

Mr. Hepburn also warned Ontario universities they might expect drastic decreases in government grants next year unless they readjust their system of fees. The Premier was speaking in defence of reductions in grants to University of Toronto, University of Western Ontario at London and Queen's University at Kingston.

The warning came after David Croll (Lib. Windsor-Walkerville) produced a newspaper clipping saying that co-eds of Western were highly critical of the government's refusal to sanction Mr. Croll's proposal of pre-marital medical examinations. The grant reduction created a "furore" at Western, Mr. Hepburn said.

The Premier charged the students had used "unfair tactics" in protesting by harassing Mrs. Hepburn and sending letters to his young children. They had sent him letters "abusive in tone."

"When they start bothering a man's home, I think it is inexcusable" the Premier said heatedly.

Conservative leader Drew agreed with the principle of having university fees readjusted so outside students might not be given the same treatment as those from Ontario. The Premier had said the universities were allowing non-resident students, many of them from the United States, to register for the same fees as Ontario students, all taking advantage of the government grants.

Reasons "Not Clear"

George S. Henry (Con. York East) was told by Agriculture Minister Dewan that the quality of Ontario cheese had fallen during the past year. The reason for this, however, were "not clear," although there had been different theories advanced.

Mr. Henry warned the standard must be maintained if the British market were to be retained. He urged extreme care should be taken in the handling of milk by farmers who sell their product to cheese factories. He asked at least a portion of funds granted the Milk Control Board should be used to encourage the improved production of cheese.

H. N. Carr (Lib. Northumberland) protested against "the impression going out from this house that farmers are careless in handling their milk."

T. A. Kidd (Con. Kingston) demanded to know whether Mr. Dewan was supporting the Dominion in a plan for a bonus of two cents a pound for cheese producers.

Not a Supporter

Mr. Dewan replied he was not supporting the federal proposal.

Mr. Henry criticized the large farms attached to provincial institutions. He spoke of the "bill of expense" of the 200 acres of the Ontario Hospital at Brockville, the "big tract" of land at Guelph and the 800-acre jail farm outside Toronto. He believed work could be provided more efficiently on much smaller farms.

Mr. Kidd wanted to know whether Ontario was "getting its share" of publicity at world expositions. He said Quebec cheese, rather than the Ontario product, was shown at the Paris exposition.

Mr. Dewan said he had no knowledge of the Paris exhibition. It was a matter handled by the Dominion government.

Supported by Roebuck

G. H. Dunbar (Con. Ottawa South) charged failure of the Dominion and Provincial governments to deal with unemployment and other economic problems led to a sharp increase in crime through the Province and in Canada at large. He charged the Dominion government was mobilizing youth for war, instead of trying to find them jobs.

Mr. Dunbar's statements were prompted by a newspaper article telling of 279 single unemployed "turned into the streets" out of the Coliseum in Toronto's Exhibition Park. He was supported by A. W. Roebuck (Lib. Toronto Bellwoods) who said it was "tragic and stupid to turn boys out in the street."

In reply Welfare Minister Cross said the men were evicted because authorities had been warned they were going to wreck the Coliseum.

Guards Armed

When reformatory estimates were up for discussion, Provincial Secretary Harry Nixon was asked whether guards at the Ontario Reformatory, Guelph, were still armed. He said they were and added "you didn't have the same desperate young devils we have today."

(The guards were armed following rioting in the reformatory about two years ago.)

"The younger element today seems to be more desperate. There never was a time in the history of the country when there have been so many holdups, car thefts and shooting affrays."

G. H. Challies (Con. Grenville-Dundas) expressed concern over the problem and declared the government was not facing it as it should. He attributed the crime increase to unemployment and lack of sobriety among young people.

"With the increase in the sale of liquor, you must expect an increase in crime."

Motion to Stand

Mr. Challies said, however, he did not wish to see the Department of Justice at Ottawa take over administration of Ontario's reformatories, nor the parole system.

Conservative leader George Drew moved for a public inquiry into subversive activities of organizations he named as Communists, Nazis and Fascists and which he charged were being financed from abroad. His motion was allowed to stand on the order paper for later consideration, but Attorney-General Gordon Conant argued such an inquiry would achieve no worthy purpose.

He maintained subversive activities came under federal jurisdiction and there should be wider powers of prosecution under the Criminal Code to deal effectively with the matter. Inquiry without prosecution would "tend to glorify" the organizations investigated.

At the afternoon sitting, the government refused Col. Drew's request it reconsider the appointment of Dr. W. D. Smith of Creemore, Ont., as Superintendent of the new mental hospital at St. Thomas. The Conservative leader charged the appointment was made through political considerations.

Believing Dr. Smith lacked the qualities needed for the position, Col. Drew said: "In Dr. Smith's interests and in the interest of the 3,900 patients he will have under his care, I urge that this matter be dealt with before either suffer irreparably from the decision that has been made."

Simpson Supports Nominee

Col. Drew described the new superintendent as "a very good general practitioner from a small town — and they don't make them any better."

He quoted United States specialists as being agreed such posts should be filled by trained psychiatrists, men trained "over the years."

Health Minister Kirby explained the set-up of mental hospitals and said Dr. Smith's experience as a general practitioner would stand him in good stead in administering the affairs of the hospital. He expressed the opinion psychiatrists might not be able to meet the public.

Dr. L. J. Simpson, Minister of Education, supported his colleague as a medical man and questioned whether a psychiatrist was the best man as superintendent. He listed requirements for the post as: General knowledge of medicine, commonsense and good judgment, and great human sympathy. Dr. Smith had all three.

Col. Drew replied with reference to Dr. Simpson's statement that he had taken up little time of the House with speeches this session. He said the Minister's speech today "is the reason he doesn't make any speeches."

Dr. Simpson jumped to his feet to "absolutely resent your nasty, dirty statement" and Liberal members called for retraction. Col. Drew declared the Minister's arguments were "utterly childish" and "demonstrated his utter incapacity to sit as a Minister."

Blue Curtains

By MARY L. STETSON

There was merry scorn in the quick glance of her blue eye.

"Aprons, Phil? Of course not! How stupid men are, even the best of them! I'm making curtains for the kitchenette."

"Now, Phil, remember you promised."

Before the mind's eye of the young husband loomed visions of marblelike cereal and of corncake green with soda. He had partaken of both that very morning and without once referring to the creamy cereal and the golden corncake of boyhood days. He had complimented himself upon being thus early a model husband. But blue curtains! He detested blue curtains. Besides, he was feeling an antipathy for those blue curtains in particular since, because of them, he had all but broken his pre-marriage promise never to talk about what his mother said, or what his mother did.

The blue curtains were finished and hung in the windows of the kitchenette but without further argument. As far as possible, both husband and wife ignored their existence.

A day came, however, when the pair over the sink could no longer be ignored. No smiling face greeted Philip at the first door to the left, third floor up, when he came home at noon. He missed it, and even before he turned the knob, had a feeling that something must be wrong.

He crossed the threshold. "Phil, oh, Phil—" It was a terrified cry that welcomed his coming.

Two strides brought him to the kitchenette. Before the gas range stood Arlene, the corner of her apron all aflame. He caught the look of horrified appeal in the blue eyes turned to his, snatched the rug from the floor and wrapped it tightly about his wife.

"All safe, honey! Don't tremble so," he soothed. "You're all right. Just a bit rumpled, that's all."

"But the doughnuts," she sobbed. "The fat spilled over, and I hadn't fried even enough for dinner. We haven't any dessert."

That evening, after the Myricks had returned home from a regular course dinner at the best hotel in town, Arlene asked abruptly, "How did you happen to think about the rug?"

"I promised not to tell," he assured her, with a countenance so serious that she laughed.

"Is it a secret, then, that rugs keep women from burning to death?" she queried.

"No, not women—little boys."

"Little boys'?" she repeated.

"Well, one little boy, to be more exact."

"Oh, I'm beginning to guess what you mean," she said, with a knowing smile. "Maybe you were the little boy."

"Maybe."

"Goodness, Phil, is that the only word in your vocabulary?"

"But my dear, we're on dangerous ground. For two weeks you've held me to that promise made on a moonlight night when I'd have promised anything under the light of the sun—or moon—to keep you from deciding in favor of Jack. I can't tell the story of what happened when I was a little boy without telling what my maternal ancestor said and did."

"Oh, Phil, you're the funniest husband that ever lived," she sighed. "I thought it was the man that always says: 'What I said before marriage doesn't count,' but you've left it for me, so I say it for you. Look, dear, do you ever feel hungry for what your mother knows how to cook?"

"Maybe."

She gave him a simulated, haughty glance then continued: "Well, if you think I shouldn't be too stupid, let's ask her to come and make us a nice, long visit. Maybe she'd teach me how to make the things you like best. And Phil, would it be awfully extravagant to get new curtains for the kitchenette so soon? Of course, only half of them got burned, but I've decided I'd like white ones better, and we should have them before Mother comes. Don't you think so, dear?"

"Maybe," he grinned, and then, no rug of the proper size being available, he used two strong arms instead.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma made the supper today on account of Nora being off on account of Thursday, smelling swell, and pop came home and we started to eat it, tasting swell, and pop said, Chickin stew made by the fair hands of the manager and directer. A good stew made by a good woman is one of nature's choicest marvels, he said.

I must admit I'm enjoying it myself, ma said. There's just one flaw in the ointment, I mean the advance noliege that while reclining in your easy chair with a relaxing cigar I'll be slaving in soapy dishwater up to both elbows she said, and pop said, Not at all, didn't you ever hear of the power of mind over dishes? Just pile them all up and leave them, an unexpected little surprise for Nora in the morning, and then we'll fly off to the movies like the Bohemian birds we are, he said.

O Willyum, I couldn't, not that Nora deserves any false consideration, because she's been very unpleasant lately, but my conscience would never allow me to leave dishes and then enjoy a picture afterwards without compunctions, ma said, and pop said, Then by gollies I'll smoke my cigar out in the kitchen and we'll face that sink shoulder to shoulder and I'll dry every dish as fast as you wash it and maybe faster.

What a picture, how do you think you're going to smoke and dry at the same time when even 2 free hands aren't enough for you the way you dry dishes, what a gassly idea and I'm using my best china, ma said, and pop said, Then I'll suggest a last desperate compromise. I'll smoke my cigar in lonely solitude and we'll do the Bohemian bird act after you've done the dishes.

Meaning they could at least go to the movies whether he dried the dishes or not.

When he didn't and they did, both seeming satisfied.

Frankford Masons Entertain Ladies

Franck Lodge Provides Splendid Program for Their Guests

Stirling, April 27 (Special)—About one hundred and fifty guests were present in the Community hall, Frankford on Wednesday night April 26 when the members and officers of Franck Lodge No. 127, A.F. & A.M. were hosts to their wives and ladies at their annual Ladies' Night. The sumptuous dinner served in the dining hall was prepared and served by the ladies of the Women's Association of Frankford United Church and the gaily decorated tables presented an appetizing appearance with their generous array of tasty dishes which made up the various courses of the dinner.

At the conclusion of the dinner Worshipful Master Harold Terry acting as toastmaster called upon W. Bro. C. C. Wessels to propose the toast to the King and the Craft. In his brief address Mr. Wessels spoke of the poetic work of Mr. Geo. Kingston former resident of Rawdon Township, who had written a poem dedicated to the coming visit of Their Majesties, which had been accepted for publication and use during their visit.

Coupled with the toast to the ladies and visitors were the names of Wor. Bro. R. A. Brown and Mrs. J. F. Lane who responded on behalf of the ladies displaying original wit and humour.

Rev. A. S. McConnell was the next speaker, who after expressing his personal greeting to the officers and members of the lodge spoke of the present crisis in which the British Empire was involved, never before has any Premier found it necessary to issue an order of conscription. This in itself pictured the seriousness of the present situation which cries out for a spirit of true loyalty on the part of the Dominions to the Motherland

Excellent Program

At this point in the program the gathering was dismissed to reassemble in the auditorium where an excellent program of musical numbers, reading, recitation and brief addresses continued. This part of the evening was opened with community singing under the direction of Wor. Bro. C. P. Wessels. Two excellent instrumental selections were contributed by Miss M. Cooper A.T.C.M. A touch of merriment was added to the program by several humorous readings, songs and sketches by Arthur Duncan of Stirling. Miss Ethel Mabee offered a pleasing soprano solo and greetings were presented to the lodge by D.D.G.M. Clem H. Ketcheson. The final speaker on the program was Rev. J. P. Lane of Frankford United Church. Art Duncan appeared several times on the program and the evening was a most enjoyable one from every standpoint.

At the conclusion of the evening's entertainment the hall was cleared and dancing enjoyed until a late hour with music supplied by the Austin orchestra of Wooler.

PETERBOROUGH WANTS MAIL TO BANCROFT TO BE CARRIED BY BUS

Because letters mailed to and from Bancroft to Peterborough now require often as long as three days to make the seventy-mile journey, members of the Peterborough Business Men's Association have petitioned the Dominion Government to permit the Bancroft bus to carry mail of all sorts on its daily run between the two points. Peterborough city council will also be asked to pass a resolution asking this new rule.

At present the mail for Bancroft travels first to Belleville from Peterborough then on to Bancroft and the least time required for the mailing of a letter is two days. Often it is three days.

Permission to operate as a mail carrier must be obtained before the Peterborough-Bancroft bus can make such deliveries.

ISSUE WARRANT FOR MAN'S ARREST

Toronto Motorist Fails to Appear in Answer to Summons

When James F. Cobban, Toronto motorist, failed to answer to his name in County Police Court held before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C. today at the Court House, the accused was subsequently convicted of failing to produce an operator's licence, contrary to the H.T.A. A fine of $2.00 and costs was levied.

On a second charge of reckless driving, however, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K. C. did not feel like proceeding in the absence of the accused. "This is a criminal case and it is doubtful if I should proceed," remarked Mr. Donnan in the absence of Cobban.

"The court will issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused man and then we'll have him here for our next sittings," responded His Worship after being assured that Cobban had been duly summonsed into court.

Both charges were preferred by H.T.O. Jillings of Napanee and were the direct result of an accident, which happened near Deseronto on April 17th, when the car which Cobban was driving was badly damaged. The officer showed proof of service of summons, which was followed by the conviction in the first incident and the subsequent issuance of a warrant for the accused man's arrest in the more serious matter.

"Practically all of the windows in the building have been broken and allegedly by mischievous boys," revealed Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C. Provincial Constable Don Carruthers, who preferred the charges, informed the court the boys were seeking pigeons, which were roosting in the building.

"No person has the right to trespass on other peoples' property. It is a serious offence and even more so when property damage results. I hereby warn you lads to stay away from this place and also not to trespass on any other property," warned His Worship as he suspended sentence and placed the boys in the custody of their parents.

THINKS BODY OF PERCY KNOX LIKELY IN BAY

A theory held by Trenton residents that the still undiscovered body of Percy Knox, former No. 2 lock-keeper of the Trent Canal who was drowned in the canal this winter may have floated down the slow currents of the Trent River to the Bay of Quinte following the removal of ice from the bay has resulted in a close watch being kept on the bay by local boat owners. It is not unlikely that the body may be found on the north shore of Prince Edward County in the bay between this city and Trenton, according to Harry M. Moore, editor of Trenton Courier-Advocate.

Alex Graham Bell Film to be Revised To Include Brantford

Brantford Angle to be Correctly Interpreted

Brantford, Ont., April 27—(CP)—Mayor R. J. Waterous announced today he had been advised in a letter from H. Louis Hagey, Liberal Member of the Ontario Legislature for Brantford that Twentieth Century Fox Corporation Limited is cancelling all Canadian bookings of the film version of the life of Alexander Graham Bell.

The move follows a series of protests on behalf of the city of Brantford, where Bell invented the telephone, a phase not included in the motion picture. Mayor Waterous has been informed that Twentieth Century Fox, with the approval of the Bell family, will endeavor to "correctly interpret' 'the Brantford angle.

He said a cameraman would be sent to Brantford from Montreal to "shoot" certain scenes and pictures also are to be taken in Hollywood, with a Brantford setting, and the fil mrevised accordingly.

In his letter to Mayor Waterous, Mr. Hagey said he had received information from O. J. Silverthorne, Chairman of the Ontario Motion Picture Censorship Board, that a director of the film company in Canada had been to New York to discuss with other officials Brantford's protest. He also received instructions from Hollywood as to steps to be taken to correct the situation.

New York, April 27—(AP)—The Norwegian motorship Oslofjord, bearing the Crown Prince Olaf and Princess Martha of Norway, and the pilot boat Sandy Hook collided off Ambrose Lightship shortly after 6.30 a.m. today.

The crash occurred 12 miles out of New York harbor in a fog which had forced all shipping to anchor overnight outside the channel.

The Sandy Hook, badly crippled, sank while attempting to reach shore. The Oslofjord made no immediate wireless appeal for assistance. Apparently no one aboard the Norwegian liner was hurt.

Coast Guard officials reported that it had learned some of the pilot boat's crew were picked up immediately by nearby boats which sped to the scene. Captain J. E. McCarthy, superintendent of the New York and New Jersey Sandy Hook Pilots Association, said no one on the Sandy Hook was lost or injured.

The Oslofjord, largest and newest passenger liner in Norwegian merchant marine, made its maiden voyage to the United States last June. She is of 18,675 gross tons and 20,500 displacement. The pilot boat Sandy Hook was approximately 175 feet overall.

Built with a projecting stem, a cruiser stern, and clean-cut white superstructure, the Oslofjord is 588 feet long and 73 feet wide and is painted grey below the deck line.

Elaborate arrangements made for the royal visitors were indefinitely delayed by the accident, since it was necessary for the Oslofjord to await the arrival of another pilot boat to bring her up to the harbor. It had been planned to take the royal couple off the Oslofjord at quarantine in the Mayor's boat, Riverside.

PAINTS PROVINCE AS 'FASCIST' CHARGE LEVELLED

Louis Fitch, Quebec Lawyer, Denounced Propaganda in Legislature

Quebec, April 27 (CP)—What was described as "heinous widespread propaganda," being used to paint the province of Quebec, its government and "many of its statesmen" as "Fascists" was denounced today in the Quebec legislature by Louis Fitch, K.C., (Un Montreal St. Louis).

Fitch charged there had been a "systematic campaign of vituperation" in the other provinces, in the United States and in England, labelling Quebec with the "character and color of Fascism."

The alleged campaign had created a "false picture" which caused a "number of important industries intending to locate in Quebec province to "seriously consider" going to Ontario, Fitch said.

"Important industrialists," who fled Fascist countries had come to Quebec to study facilities for investment, he said.

"But the main source of hesitation on their part to invest their money here, is the fear that having fled from one Fascist country they do not wish to repeat their experience in another."

Refers to Party

He explained it was not for him to "make a defence of the French-Canadian population" of Quebec, but as a citizen of the province it was a "duty to state facts, to denounce the series of gross libels."

Fitch referred to the National Unity Party, Fascist organization headed by Adrien Arcand, and described it as having "insignificant" influence and size.

It did not "in the slightest represent the wishes nor the mentality of the people of this province."

He charged the party chef was "directly financed from Germany".

He gave addresses in Montreal of the headquarters of the party, where its "troops" were drilled and where its "espionage headquarters operates under the guise of a domestic employment agency".

He gave other addresses and telephone numbers of what he said were party organizations for "manufacture of uniforms", and for instruction.

Fitch said there was "no fear" the doctrines might influence the minds of the people of the province.

Attached to Canada

The people of Quebec are attached to the Canadian constitution, not to "movements repugnant to our traditions and institutions," Premier Duplessis said.

Mr. Duplessis suggested giving importance to the "movements" was performing "a bad service to the province."

He mentioned "rumors in the United States that Quebec is Fascist."

Quebec was "attached only to the Canadian constitution and its autonomy under the fact," he said.

The Premier charged "Liberal leaders" were partly to blame for the "impression abroad." He said "it was Liberal leaders who claimed there was no cause for the campaign against Commission and that attention should be given to Fascism."

In comment on charges by Fitch that a "campaign of vituperation" in the United States and England had "invested" Quebec with "the character and color of Fascism, Premier Duplessis said:

"Let the United States mind its own business and we will mind ours. Let England settle its problems, and Quebec will do the same.

"It is not necessary to be knowing in foreign affairs to realize if Germans like Hitler, that does not necessarily mean the world does, and certainly not the Province of Quebec."

AIKEN'S W. A.

Aiken's W. A. was held on Thursday at the home of Mrs. Perry Hamilton. Dinner was served at the noon hour, and a fine program was given during the afternoon. The roll call was answered by the naming of favorite hymns. The Scripture was read by Mrs. C. McMullen with the devotional by Mrs. S. Spafford and prayer offered by Mrs. Wm. Bush.

Readings were given by "Gifts of a Woman's Love," by Mrs. Ken Bush; "The Test," by Mrs. S. Westover, and "He Is Risen," by Mrs. McMullen

During the business period it was decided to hold a rummage sale in the near future. Meeting closed with benediction and the opening call to worship was as follows:

It is a good thing to be thankful
And to praise God the Father
To begin the day with love and kindness
And to be faithful unto evening
To raise the voice of your heart in song
In living music, true and sweet.

At a recent international football game between England and Wales the referee was J. C. H. Ireland of Scotland.

The Government of India has reduced the amount of household goods carried free as baggage by the railways.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was the theme of the winter carnival procession in Aixen-Province, France.

Air Raid Lamps 'Made in Germany'

London, April 27—(AP)— Sir John Anderson, Minister of Civilian Defence, disclosed in the House of Commons today that Great Britain had bought a large quantity of German air raid lamps last September when there was fear of war.

Air raid precautions volunteers had protested last Sunday when they discovered thousands of oil lamps to be used for an air raid test in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire bore the mark "made in Germany."

Asked to explain in the House, Sir John gave the assurance that Britain no longer was relying on Germany for any war supplies.

VENDOR OFFERED 60 GALLONS SYRUP AT 90 CENTS PER GALLON

Sapbuckets have been taken in, shanties closed and in general all the procedure that accompanies the end of the maple-syrup making season is well under way. And with its ending the inevitable rise in price of the sweet delicacy is here. Vendors on the city market today announced their prices at two dollars per gallon and fifty cents per quart, with little or no business being transacted.

During the later hours of the morning a vendor claiming his home as Seeley's Bay, arrived with a truck loaded with sixty gallons of syrup. He offered his stock-in-trade at a rate of ninety cents per gallon for the lot, and $1.25 for individual gallons Lack of business however compelled him to move to further markets.

Nicle introduced the Institutes new Magazine Home and Country. Owing to lack of time the paper on Buymanship re wools, prepared by Mrs. McCarey was not given. Aylesworth pouring tea, luncheon was served by the hostesses. In reporting the March meeting an error was made in listing the names of the Past Presidents who were present at the banquet. Tweed

Tweed — A large congregation turned out on Sunday night at the United Church to hear Rev. H. L. Morrison who gave a very fine address on Hitler's confession "I am heathen to the core" with practical applications to the lives of Christian people.

The observance of the Wednesday half-holiday in Tweed will be inaugurated by the merchants on May 3rd and will continue through September.

Mr. Harris Way, local barber has removed to his new location in Mrs. John Quinn's block. Mr. M. R. Rose, electrician is occupying the southern part of the premises which has been sub-divided to accommodate both businesses.

The Spring break-up in the northern sections of the County is still pending. The waters of Stoco Lake continued to rise slowly until Monday when they reached a point which will probably be the peak for the year, a point far below the record of two or three years ago. The ice still remains in the lake. Unless a high wind breaks it up soon, it will probably establish an all time record for lateness in leaving the lake.

A few district farmers have begun to plough some of their fields on high ground but no seeding has been attempted as the land is wet and cold with some snow still lying in protected spots. The season is the latest in a number of years.

Open season for muskrats has been extended to the end of the month as unfavorable weather conditions have resulted in very poor catches by local trappers.

Mrs. George E. Clark was the delegate of St. James' W.A. at the annual deanery meeting held in Kingston last week, on Thursday and Friday. Mrs. Clark was the guest of Canon and Mrs. A. E. Smart of Portsmouth, formerly of Tweed.

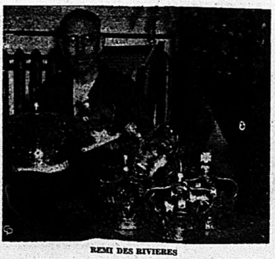
Royal Crown Syndicate Formed By Ottawa Hospital Patients



REMI DES RIVIERES

By Central Press Canadian

Ottawa, April 27.—The visit of the King and Queen was an incentive to Remi Desrivieres, 50-year-old invalid who is without the use of his legs. His hands, however, are nimble and talented. His brain is that of a business man, so much so that he is now in the position of an employer for he has six men working for him, most of whom are invalids like himself.

They call themselves The Royal Crown Syndicate, of which, of course, Desrivieres is the president. What are they producing? Crowns—royal crowns. Desriviers started production last fall. It was a hobby at first and only a few samples were made. Encouraged by friends who found his handiwork of amazing quality, he started producing on a larger scale with the help of other men. Today, Desrivieres is in business—inside the walls of a hospital which cannot imprison his ingenuity or spirit.

They produce crowns in three sizes. Each consists of 172 different parts. They are made of heavy cardboard glued together and covered with gold paint. Different shades of colored glass provided an excellent imitation of the British crown's jewels. White absorbent cotton tightly wound on a wire and spotted in black is used to reproduce the ermine on the base of the crown.

An inside lining of red velvet adds to the appearance of the already attractive color scheme. The crowns are to be used for decoration purposes.

In Juvenile Court Boy Refuses to Assist Police in Tracing the Missing Caps

Hamilton, Ont., Apr. 28 (CP) — While Provincial Police investigators intensified their search for 4,000 dynamite caps missing from the Canada Crushed Stone Company's storehouse at Dundas, a 15-year-old boy, awaiting trial on a delinquency charge arising out of the recovery of about 175 of the explosive units, has been removed to the city jail for safekeeping as the result of a rumored conspiracy to rescue him from the detention home.

Confirming reports that police had suddenly decided to guard the boy closely, George W. Ballard, K.C., Crown Attorney, said the move had been taken on his advice when the alleged conspiracy was brought to his attention.

Albert H. Ward, Inspector of the C.I.D. branch, Provincial Police, still is working with County Police on the theft of 100 pounds of dynamite from a Hagersville quarry magazine three weeks ago.

In juvenile court yesterday, police said the lad refused to assist in the task of tracing the 4,000 dynamite caps, each of which carried enough explosive to make them potentially dangerous. Neither would he say who, if anyone, had taken part in the raid.

Why the Weather!

By Maj. A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Why it rains! The fundamental process in nature causing rain is the cooling of air with which invisible water vapor is mixed. The cooling must bring the vapor to or near the saturation point, which is the same as saying that the humidity becomes 100 per cent. Air is cooled in various ways, but the most vigorous cooling is brought about by air rising. Air rises because it over runs colder air, or is being forced up an incline. Other ways of cooling are (1) air moving from low to higher latitudes, (2) warm air blowing over a colder surface, (3) air in contact with a surface cooled by radiation, and (4) air cooling by radiating it's own heat. But these last four ways seldom cause rain.

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

STARTS PRODUCTION OF LOW-PRICED CAR

Indianapolis, April 28 (AP)—Powel Crosley, Cincinnati radio and refrigerator manufacturer, introduced to the motor industry today a new low-priced two-cylinder automobile designed to get a top speed of 50 miles an hour and run 50 miles on a gallon of gasoline. It is to be built in two-passenger convertible coupes, priced at $325, and four passenger convertible sedans, at $350. Production will start at once.

CHARLES PREFERS COMFORT INSTEAD OF CARD PARTIES

Omaha, Neb. April 28 (AP)—Charles Butterfield's wife, Gertrude, complained in a petition for divorce that he was old fashioned because he wanted to stay home nights instead of going to bridge and pinochle parties.

NEWFOUNDLAND DOG MISTAKEN FOR A BEAR

Blair, Ont., April 28 (CP)—Ira Good, Kitchener, who owns a farm near here, reported a black bear prowling about the farm yards. An organized hunt was decided on when bear hunters took a look at tracks left by the animal and corroborated the statement. The hunters found — a black Newfoundland dog.

World Reacts To Address

Paris, Apr. 28 (AP)—First French reaction to the speech of Chancellor Hitler in circles close to the Foreign Office was, in the words of one, that it "closely resembles an anti-climax".

Diplomatic sources, however, said they considered that Hitler might have been preparing the way for a sudden stroke against Poland.

His denunciation of the 10-year German-Polish non-aggression pact caused considerable uneasiness when taken in connection with his announcement that Poland had refused his "just" offer for a settlement of Danzig and Polish Corridor problems.

Italian Reaction.

Rome, Apr. 28 (AP) — Virginio Gayda, editor who often speaks Premier Mussolini's mind, today praised Chancellor Hitler's speech as "a warning against the foreign policy" which counsels "offensive action for the protection of imperial interests and egoisms."

Gayda's comment in Il Giornale D'Italia appeared on the streets a minute after the German Chancellor's speech ended.

He termed Hitler's words the answer not only to President Roosevelt but also to the "Franco-British policy of encirclement which the three

Mid-Ocean Peace Conference Proposed by President Rejected

New York, April 28—(AP)— A plan by President Roosevelt for a mid-ocean peace conference with Premier Mussolini and Chancellor Hitler, who rejected the proposal, was reported by the New York Times today.

The purpose of the conference, to be held at sea, or near some neutral island such as one of the Azores, was to "learn from the dictators at first hand their minimum terms for pledging lasting peace and, if he (the President) found these practicable, to offer his services as intermediary." The Times said in a Washington dispatch by Arthur Krock. The proposal was said to have been made some months ago.

"On behalf of the President it was suggested that each of the three statesmen board a naval vessel and come privately together for the unprecedented conference." The Times said. "The message was delivered to Signor Mussolini through an agent of Mr. Roosevelt. It is understood here that the Duce transmitted it and was informed that the Fuehrer could not arrange to leave Europe for that purpose even if he believed a settlement could come of it."

"The President's purpose," The Times says, "was to learn from the dictators at first hand their minimum terms for pledging lasting peace, and if he found these practicable, to offer his services as intermediary."

The time of the overtures was set at "some months ago, probably between the May and September crises."

The Times says the exact dates and other details of the overtures could not be learned "because those to whom the President communicated his effort and its failure took fright when these details were sought." They did confirm "this extraordinary effort for peace," however, he adds.

The President toyed with the idea of having King George, President Lebrun and Joseph Stalin attend the proposed meeting. Krock says, "but on reflection abandoned that as impracticable and perhaps unnecessary."

POLICE ON WATCH FOR QUARTETTE OF U. S. NEGROES

Are Wanted for Armed Robbery in States, and were Reported Travelling This Way

TOOK $12000

Belleville and Provincial Police looked in vain for four colored persons two men and two women said to have been travelling in two automobiles, early today when Toronto police notified Belleville authorities the four negroes were wanted in the United States on charges of armed robbery. The information added that the persons sought were in possession of $12,000.00 said to have been stolen in New Jersey.

Inspector Lovett, of the Toronto Police Department, notified Provincial and City police that two cars, one bearing New York and the other Pennsylvania licence plates were reported heading easterly through Ontario, carrying a colored man and woman in each car.

Reports that a large automobile was seen east of Belleville parked on a side road where the occupants were changing a tire, took Provincial Police poste haste to the scene, but no such persons were found between here and Deseronto. City police, held constant vigil at the lower bridge during the early hours this morning, but no colored persons passed through Belleville. Inspector Frank Gardner stated if the robbers were in Ontario and travelling easterly they no doubt were using Highway No. 7 and not the front highway.

According to reports from the Toronto authorities a hold up took place in New Jersey late Wednesday night, four colored people escaping with $12,000.00 in cash.

Only Colonies Between Britain And Germany

Chancellor Hitler Says Question Will Not Become Cause of Military Conflict

Berlin, Apr. 28 (CP)—Chancellor Hitler in his address to the Reichstag today said the only question between Great Britain and Germany was the return of Germany's war lost colonies. He added "this would not become the cause of a military conflict".

At one point he said: "I am not aware for what purpose I should wage a war at all," and added that he had "an abhorrence of war".

"I have not conducted any war," he said.

MAY DEFER ELECTION

Ottawa, Apr. 28 (CP)—Dr. J. M. Robb, National Conservative Organizer, told the West and South Ottawa Conservative Association last night "there is a possibility of no Dominion election until 1940".

"My latest information is that the boys on the hill are not so anxous to face the voters and it may not be pulled off this year. Nevertheless we must be prepared for an October or November election and not be caught napping," he said.

Specific Answers Given By Chancellor Hitler To President Roosevelt

Berlin, April 28 — (AP) —Following is a summary of the specific answers Adolf Hitler gave today to President Roosevelt in the name of the German people:

(I)

Mr. Roosevelt is of the opinion that I, too, must realize that throughout the world hundreds of millions of human beings are living in constant fear of a new war or even a series of wars.

This he says is of concern to the people of the United States for whom he speaks as it must also be to the peoples of the other nations of the entire western hemisphere.

The answer: It must be said in the first place that this fear of war has undoubtedly existed among mankind from time immemorial, and justifiably so. For instance, after the peace treaty of Versailles 14 wars were waged between 1919 and 1938 alone, in none of which Germany was concerned, but in which the states of the western hemisphere in whose name President Roosevelt also speaks, were indeed concerned.

26 Interventions

In addition there were in the same period 26 violent interventions and sanctions carried through by means of bloodshed and force Germany also played no part whatever in these. The United States alone has carried out military interventions in six cases since 1918.

Since 1918 Soviet Russia has engaged in 10 wars and military actions involving force and bloodshed. Again Germany was concerned in none of these.

The reason for this fear (of a new war) lies simply and solely in an unbridled agitation on the part of the press, an agitation as mendacious as it is base, in the circulation of vile pamphlets about the heads of foreign states, and in an artificial spreading of panic which in the end goes so far that interventions from another planet are believed possible and cause scenes of desp[illegible]

Impose Restraint

I belie[illegible] as soon as the responsible governments impose upon themselves and their journalistic organs the necessary restraint and truthfulness as regards the relations of the various countries to one another, and in particular as regards internal happenings in other countries, the fear of war will disappear at once, and the tranquility which we all desire so much will become possible.

(II)

In his telegram Mr. Roosevelt expressed the belief that every major war, even if it were to be confined to other continents, must have serious consequences while it lasts, and also for generations to come.

The answer: No one knows this better than the German people. For the peace treaty of Versailles imposed burdens on the German people which could not have been paid off even in a hundred years, although it has been proved precisely by American teachers of constitutional law, historians and professors of history that Germany was no more to blame for the outbreak of the war than any other nation.

But I do not believe that every conflict must have disastrous consequences for the whole surrounding world, that is for the whole

Says Railways Should Not Carry Free Passengers

Ottawa, April 28 (CP)—Railways should not carry anybody free "not even members of parliament," Trade Minister Euler said before the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons today.

The committee was going through the voluminous bill amending the grain Act. One clause would have the effect of requiring the railways and other carriers of Canada to grant free transportation to all those concerned in administration of the board of grain commissioners.

Railways had protested, Mr. Euler said, and he did not blame them. The Act at present provides free transportation for the board, the secretary and certain other officials and it was decided to leave it unchanged.

Denies Any Invasion of American Territory Planned by Germany — Assures France Over Alsace and Lorraine —Declares Foreign Rights Never Violated by Germany

Warsaw, Apr. 28 (AP)—Poland replied to Reichsfuehrer Hitler's Reichstag speech with a warning today that attempts to put pressure on her will be answered "promptly and in the same manner".

Berlin, Apr. 28 (AP)—Adolf Hitler summarily ended the Anglo-German Naval Pact and 10-year peace agreement with Poland today and offered to give purely reciprocal assurances of non-aggression to those countries which come to him and ask for them.

In reply to President Roosevelt's recent appeal for at least a decade of peace he gave the United States Government direct assurances for the territories of the American continent.

"I should not like to let this opportunity pass," he told the German Reichstag, "without giving above all to the President of the United States an assurance regarding those territories which would after all give him the most cause for apprehension, namely the United States itself and the other Staes of the American continent."

RANK FRAUDS AND UNTRUTHS.

All assertions concerning an impending German attack or invasion on or in American territory, the Fuehrer classed as "rank frauds and gross untruths".

He laid the blame on "British war mongers" and on Poland's calling up of troops for his cancellation of the Anglo-German Naval Treaty and the 10-year peace agreement with Poland. He contended Poland had rejected a just offer for the solution of the problem of Danzig and the Polish Corridor.

The Chancellor declared the basis for the naval treaty, limiting Germany's navy to 35 per cent of the British fleet, had been removed "by the policy of encirclement".

He said he hoped to avoid an armaments race with Britain and added:

"Should the British Government wish to enter once more into negotiations with Germany on this problem no one would be happier than I."

AGREEMENT INFRINGED CLAIM.

In announcing his decision that the 10-year non-aggression agreement of 1934 with Poland had been infringed, Hitler ominously referred to the fate of Czecho-Slovakia by saying:

"The worst is that now Poland, like Czecho-Slovakia a year ago, believes under the pressure of a lying international campaign that it must call up troops although Germany on her part has not called up a single man and has not thought of proceeding in any way against Poland."

He asserted his offers to Poland had been rejected.

These offers, he publicly revealed for the first time, were:

Return of Danzig as a Free State into the framework of the German Reich; a Sovereign German route across the Polish Corridor to East Prussia and a railway line across the Corridor at Germany's disposal; a free harbor at Danzig for Poland; acceptance of present boundaries between the two countries as final; a 25-year non-aggression treaty, and a guarantee of the independence of Slovakia by Germany, Poland and Hungary.

Fat Says Doctor is Like Money in Bank Which is Fluid Account and Reserve

Toronto, Apr. 28 CP)—In common terms, fat may be considered as so much money in the bank which serves the double purpose of a reserve against the "rainy day" and of a fluid account to tide over from one day to the next, according to Dr. R. G. Sinclair, of Queen's University, Kingston, who delivered a paper on the subject to the Federation of American Societies for experimental biology here today.

"Just as we cannot use our bank deposit in trade but must first convert it into legal currency, so too the fat in our bodies is converted into a useable form in order to provide energy for the body machine," he explained. "Some have too much at their waistline; some do not have enough. The conversion of fat into "legal tender" involves introduction of phosphoric acid and a nitrogen-containing compound into each fat molecule. The substance which results is known as phospholipid."

BOARD REQUEST IS TURNED DOWN

Council Refuses to Spend $50,000 for New School Addition

City council at its regular committee meeting last evening turned down the request of the Belleville Board of Education for the sum of $50,000 to be applied to the construction of an addition to Queen Mary School.

A deputation of six members from the Board made a personal appeal to members of council, citing the fact of the school's declared present overcrowded condition as one which needs immediate attention.

Council after pondering the matter and reaching agreement on the refusal for further expenses this year gave the reason for refusal on the grounds that the matter has been brought to the attention of the Provincial government "time and again" and that the property owners of Belleville "are unable to bear the whole expense of primary and secondary education, which taxes one-third of all city budgets."

"But," also read the recommendation "the provincial government takes no steps to remedy the admitted evil.

"We therefore insist that no more capital expenditures be allowed to further penalize our property owners until they (the government) adjust this grievance.

"If, however, the government will allow us to charge this amount to our Sinking Fund surplus, we agree to the Board of Education's request, but with the stipulation that this matter of unjust taxation be remedied."

Council Recommends May 22 As Empire Day in City

Also Recommended That "Outside Audit' be Undertaken

OTHER MOTIONS

City council at its regular committee meeting last evening passed the recommendation that in view of the fact large numbers of Belleville residents will be visiting Kingston or Toronto on May 21st or May 22nd on the occasion of the visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen to these cities, that His Worship, Mayor Bone, be requested to proclaim Monday, May 22nd as the Victoria Day holiday, instead of Wednesday, May 24th.

"Is city council thus able to fix this date and observe this holiday in view of the fact, that the date of Victoria Day holiday has been nationally procaimed?" Mayor Bone was asked this morning.

"City council of any city can do anything, if it really sets its mind to it", declared the Mayor. "What else are councils for, if not to express and carry out the wishes of the citizens who elect council?"

A recommendation that an "outside audit" also be proceeded with for the City of Belleville was also passed by committee and will be presented for formal approval at the next regular meeting on Monday evening.

Under another recommendation the City Welfare Bureau will be asked that in view of the approach of spring, this committee or office endeavour to cut down as far as possible on all relief supplies, including fuel and clothing.

Other recommendations would ask that the matter of services for properties (sewage) outside Belleville be referred to the special Property Committee. That the offer of J. W. Moore of $30 for a 50-foot lot on Ridley Avenue be accepted, provided a house to cost not less than $3,000 be constructed on the lot, and that the 1939 taxes be paid. That the tender of J. J. Turner and Sons for $100 for the installation of awning canvas on the city hall be accepted and that work be commenced under the direction of the chairman of Market and City Property.

Another recommendation would refuse the granting of any new licence for second hand business on Front Street and prohibit any transfer of present second hand business from present sites to Front Street.

O. S. D. Presents Awards To Girl Athlete Winners

Mrs. M.E. Branscombe, Also, Gives Talk on Value of Girl Guide Work

TEAM WORK STRESSED

Girl athletes, members of championship teams, and the Girl Guides of the Fourth Belleville (O.S.D.) Company were guests of honor at a splendid banquet held at the Ontario School for the Deaf last evening when crests and pennants were presented to winning groups.

The banquet took place in the spacious Assembly Hall which was specially decorated for the occasion with blue and gold wall medallions of the team names, while the words "Girl Athletes" in huge letters at one end of the hall were made up of the team badges worn by the girls. The tables were beautifully decorated with Spring flowers and school colours while cleverly designed tableaux in miniature depicted scenes on a badminton court, volley ball court and a Guide campfire scene. These were greatly admired by the visitors. Among the guests last evening were Mrs. W. N. Ponton, former divisional commissioner of the Guides, Mrs. M. E. Branscombe, divisional commissioner, Mrs. Leo B. Riggs, district commissioner, Mrs. Spruston, Captain of Company One, Miss M. Allison, Belleville Collegiate, Mr. George F. Stewart who acted as interpreter for the addresses, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. W. J. Morrison, and members of the teaching staff of the School, among whom were two interesting visitors of this year, Miss M. Seex of England and Miss H. Sigurdson of British Columbia.

Awards Presented

A banquet was served, at the conclusion of which Mr. W. J. Morrison, Superintendent of the School, who acted as chairman for the evening, called upon all to join in a toast to His Majesty, the King. Mr. Morrison welcomed the visitors to the gathering on behalf of the staff and students. Organized athletics for girls began at the school only four or five years ago, and now under the direction of Miss Cecelia Maloney, the girls were receiving splendid training in sports in which they could take an active part when they left school. Similarly, Girl Guiding has been instituted, under the direction of Miss Helen Keeler, and this would link the girls with Guides everywhere, and prove of inestimable worth to them in later life. Mr. Morrison called upon the following girls to receive awards:

Crests —Senior Badminton —E. Charron; L. Bourdeau.

Pennants:—

Senior Softball—Tigers—E. Charron (Capt.)

Intermediate Softball—Eagles — M. Duller (Capt.)

Senior Volley Ball—Poppies— J. McLaren (Capt.)

Intermediate Volley Ball—Tulips —M. Churchill (Capt.)

Junior Volley Ball—Daffodils — K. Bartley (Capt.)

Intermediate Badminton Doubles —1.—I. Smith; 2.—H. Reble.

Intermediate Rounders — Captains—1. — M. Bennett, Capt of Garnets; 2.—N. Alstrop Capt. of Opals; 3.—H. Reble, capt. of Emeralds.

Each of the recipients made a gracious reply to the words of the Superintendent, and it was amazing to hear these girls speak so clearly, most of them being almost totally deaf.

Commissioner Speaks

Mrs. Leo B. Riggs introduced to the audience, Mrs. M. E. Branscombe, "mother" of Guiding in Belleville, and Brown Owl of Company Three, who gave an inspiring address to the girls. Guiding, she said, helped the girl to "rule her kingdom with a firm, sure hand." It was a training in citizenship and building of character that would stand the test in the world. It stressed high purpose and aim in life and its ideal was developing one's powers to the utmost, and using them for God. Mrs. Spruston, captain of the First Belleville Company, gave an earnest and thoughtful talk on Guide work which fostered good sportsmanship and team spirit, and those qualities which would make girls fine homemakers and loyal citizens. Its principles would make for world peace and understanding, each person doing their bit, and all pulling together.

Miss Allison, director of girls' athletics at Belleville Collegiate, spoke last evening, congratulating the girls on their fine attainments but urging them not to let the glamour of winning outshine the sport, for the game was the thing. She compared life to a baseball game, at which all cannot be big leaguers, but at which one can do one's best. There must be team spirit, always, and the game is not over until the end. Each new day brings a brand new chance at bat, and those who have to spend some time on the benches must prepare themselves to be ready when the call of their vocation comes. We must play the game well all through life, until the Umpire calls the game for darkness.

Mr. P. C. McGuire, who is the Vice Chairman of the Salvation Army Building Campaign Fund.

Miss Catherine Ford, of the O.S.D. Staff, congratulated the girl athletes on their splendid work in sports. This common interest in popular games would help them to go out and meet others on a firmer basis, and Guiding would be another great asset to them when they left school.

Mr. Morrison in introducing Miss Keeler and Miss Maloney, referred to their zealous work in arranging the fine banquet, and to their keen interest in the girls' activities. Miss Helen Keeler, in an interesting address, referred to the bond that Guiding made with other girls outside the school, and hoped that the members of the O.S.D. Company would join in companies at home when they left school. Theirs is the only deaf company in Ontario and has an enrolment of 34 girls. The Company was grateful to Mrs. Riggs for flag and pins and to the Girl Guide Council which had promised to supply them with belts.

Miss Cecelia Maloney thanked most sincerely all those who by their kindness and cooperation had made the banquet such a success. She thanked, too, the girls, senior, intermediate and junior, who had entered so whole heartedly into the games and who not only won with a smile, but lost with a smile. It was a great pleasure to have as guests officials of Bellevile Girl Guides and Miss Allison, all of whom had contributed to make this a very special occasion in school life.

Gov't to Issue Silver Dollar Commemorative Of the Royal Visit

Further information has been received from the office of the Postmaster General, Ottawa, by local Postmaster J. V. C. Tuaisch, of the intention of the Royal Mint to strike a new silver dollar of commemorative design to mark the visit of Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth.

The new dollar differs in design from the two issues that are now in circulation. The obverse or face impression bears the likeness of His Majesty, King George the Sixth with the inscription—"Georgivs VI D.G. Rex E: Ind. Imp."

The new dollar will be available to the public at the banks early in May, and at post office where there are no local branch banks.

REICHSTAG GIVEN

"This was the sole aim of all my actions."

"The President of the North American Union (Roosevelt)," he said, "has addressed a telegram to me, the unusual contents of which are known to you.

"Before I, as recipient, saw this document the rest of the world had already received knowledge of it through the radio and press. In addition, we had received the friendly information in countless commentaries of the democratic world's organs that this telegram constituted a very clever tactical paper which was designed to place the responsibility for the warlike measures of the plutocracies upon the states governed by their peoples.

"I have therefore decided to summon the German Reichstag in order thereby to give you as the elected representatives of the German nation the opportunity of getting to know my reply first and foremost and either to ratify it or reject it.

Historical Events

"Beyond that, however, I also deemed it expedient to remain true to the procedure adopted by President Roosevelt and on my part and with our means to give the rest of the world knowledge of my answer.

"I wish, however, also to seize upon this opportunity in order to give expression to those emotions which are astir in me in view of the tremendous historical events of the month of March of this year.

"I can give expression to my deepest feelings only in the form of humble thanks to Providence which called me and which enabled me, the one-time unknown soldier of the war, to rise to the position of Fuehrer of my passionately beloved people.

"Providence has let me find the ways for liberating our people from the deepest misery without bloodshed and for leading them upward again.

"It (Providence) has permitted me to fulfil the only task of my life—to raise my German people from defeat and to free them from the shackles of the most disgraceful times of all.

Not Violated Rights

"This was the sole aim of all my actions.

"I have merely desired to restore what others once had broken by force. I merely wanted to repair what satanic meanness or human lack of sense destroyed or spoiled.

"I have therefore, not taken any step that violated foreign rights but have merely restored the rights violated 20 years ago.

"Within the framework of the present day great German Reich there is no area that has not belonged to it from most ancient times or that was not connected with it or stood under its sovereignty.

"Long before an American continent had been discovered by white men or, more than that, been settled, this Reich existed not only in its present greatness but beyond that with many areas and provinces that had since been lost.

Terrible Scourge

"When, 21 years ago, the bloody war came to an end the fervent hope burned in millions of minds that a peace of common sense and of justice would reward and render happy the peoples who had been visited by the terrible scourge of the world war.

"I say 'reward' because all these human beings on their part were not guilty of this terrible happening, no matter what the findings of historians may be.

"And if even today there still are politicians in several countries who even then could be named as responsible for this most cruel butchery of all times, nevertheless the great masses of the fighting soldiers of all countries and peoples could at best be pitied but in no case be found guilty.

Millions Cheated

"They all had a right to a peace of common sense and justice. Out of this peace, however, millions were at that time cheated. For the victors, too, the effect of the peace treaties was most damaging.

"Then for the first time the misfortune became evident of having men determine politics who had not fought in the war. "For, the soldiers know no hatred—but those old politicians who had most carefully protected their costly lives from the terrors of war, as avenging spirits, became crazy and pounced down upon humanity......

"Hatred, meanness and folly were the intellectual fathers of the Versailles dictate.

"Almost 115,000,000 human beings had their right of self-determination violated, not by the victorious soldiers but by the crazy politicians, were arbitrarily taken out of their old communities of interest and placed together in new communities without taking into account their blood, their derivation, common sense and economic necessities.

"The consequences were terrible. The flock of most stupid ignoramuses tore up an order, within the living spaces of which almost 140 humans per square kilometer had formed their means of subsistence. This order had formed itself out of almost 2,000 years of historical developments."

LIEUT. - GOVERNOR

peace and war in face of recent breaches of international law and good faith," had overshadowed all other considerations.

Unanimity Marked

For these reasons, the Lieutenant-Governor found it gratifying "to mark the unanimity with which this assembly, sinking all differences, expressed itself on the necessity for united action by all parts of the British Empire in defence of our free institutions."

The traditional shower of order papers marked the passing of the third session of the 20th legislature which sat 34 days after opening March 8. During the final sitting much attention was given to the "free institutions" to which Lieutenant-Governor Matthews referred.

Last big debate centred around a motion by Conservative leader George A. Drew calling for a public inquiry into un-Canada activities of three groups—Nazis, Communists and Fascists—which he charged were being given financial assistance from abroad to spread their subversive doctrines throughout Canada.

Motion Rejected

While rejecting Col. Drew's resolution, Attorney-General Gordon Conant assured the legislature the activities of such organizations which seek to undermine democratic institutions will be kept under strict surveillance by Provincial Police and evidence unearthed will be turned over to Dominion authorities "in the hope it will stimulate them to action."

Acceding to Mr. Conant's request, Col. Drew withdrew the motion. The Attorney-General argued it would serve no useful purpose because no provision was made in the criminal code for prosecutions and to investigate without follow-up prosecutions "would develop considerable publicity for these people and tend to glorify and magnify their activities."

Withdraws Motion

Another resolution touching on somewhat the same subject was withdrawn by its sponsor Col. Fraser Hunter (Lib. Toronto St. Patrick). This called for the dismissal of Professor G. M. A. Grube of Trinity College and Professor Frank Underhill of the University of Toronto for purported "anti-British utterances."

He withdrew his demand after Hon. J. L. Simpson, Minister of Education, announced that university authorities were taking action and "the matter will be dealt with in the proper manner."

The prorogation speech made passing reference to the visit of the King and Queen to Queen's Park, scheduled May 22. The Lieutenant Governor noted "the continuous threat of war has naturally caused considerable speculation" as to the visit.

"Except for the actual outbreak of hostilities, which does not now seem imminent, it is not considered that present plans will be altered," he added, "and I trust that when Their Majesties visit this assembly you will all be able to take part in this happy and historical event."

Two matters vital to industry were dealt with, the House killing a private bill to give workers the right to organize in unions of their choice and Premier Hepburn announced tentative plans for a round table conference on unemployment.

David Croll (Lib. Windsor-Walkerville) expressed "deep disappointment" at the failure of his measure, although the government agreed to give further study to this type of legislation with a view to presenting a government bill next session.

Conservative members suggested the conference on unemployment and Mr. Hepburn agreed to confer with them immediately after this session on their proposal.

The Premier also announced a nine-man committee to conduct an inquiry into the administration of Ontario's timber resources by the Department of Lands and Forests, now headed by Hon. Peter Heenan. Hon. Paul Leduc, Mines Minister, will be chairman and sittings are expected after the royal visit.

DEMOCRACY

One of the finest pleas for democracy was uttered by Earl Baldwin at Toronto University last week. Democracies "must strive with more insistence and passion than ever before to make real the twin ideals of social justice and individual freedom. These are the pillars essential for the support of any decent civilization, Christian or other, and one is needed to balance and correct the other."

He said that there is a middle way "freed from entrenched privileges and class hatred, the way of political equality and economic opportunity, and that is the way our people wish to tread, freely and not to the goose-step."

Again he declared that "democracies must attain new technical efficiency for self-defence and learn to co-operate. Secondly, citizens of democracies must be firmly convinced that the countries they are called upon to defend with their lives are 'more and more worth living and dying for because they provide more and more the conditions and the elements of the good life—the divine right of the common man'."

Much is summed up in these words which will bear reading again and again to gain the full import of their meaning and the reality of democracy.

THE BUDGET

Canada's deficit for the coming year is estimated to be $60,000,000 against deficit of about $55,000,000 for the past fiscal year. The budget contained few surprises as far as general conditions are concerned and stresses the task which lies upon those who guide the country's financial destinies.

The outlook is that revenue next year will reach $490,000,000 with expenditure for the year 1939-40 estimated at $550,100,000.

One form of relief offered by Finance Minister Dunning is the proposed ten per cent income tax credit to industries which expand or improve their plants, in the hope that private industry will be able to render help in speeding up business industry. Income tax exemptions granted new mines are extended for three years. There are no new taxes and rates are unchanged.

National solvency is not imperilled, the Minister made clear, though there has been a period of ten years of unbalanced budgets. He pointed out that this trend could not be allowed to continue indefinitely, though easy spending by the government was not the way out he indicated, but rather an awakening of business and industry was the way.

There is one factor that has overshadowed budgets in all lands, the international problem which has caused unsettlement and fear and doubt. There is not only the effect of international tension which detracts from the free flow of commerce but there is also the dislocation of peaceful production due to the need for security, that is, in the making of munitions, Mr. Dunning shows.

Canada has a good trade balance and is fourth of the exporting nations and fifth in the total volume of trade. In the last fiscal year the trade balance reached $350,000,000 which helped greatly to preserve Canada's foreign credit.

Hon. Mr. Dunning says of the future — "Confidence and courage are essential for the effective working of any economic system based on individual liberty and private enterprise. These qualities are difficult to develop in the world today, but at least in Canada there is more chance for their exercise and development than in most other countries."

UNITY OF MATERIAL IN UNIVERSE

A bit of light that had been on its way to earth for the past three thousand years covering a distance of eighteen quadrillion miles, caught in a newly devised light net, has just revealed for the first time that the great celestial bodies of luminous star-dust, known as the gaseous nebulae, are composed of the very same elements as the sun, moon, earth and planets are composed of. This is a proof that the vast universe in which man dwells is homogeneous in its composition. According to a report by William L. Laurence in the New York Times, until now it had been believed that these luminous cosmic clouds in far-off space were composed only of tenuous gases, as hydrogen, helium, nitrogen and oxygen, but the National Academy of Science meeting in Washington was told that the star-clouds have been proven to contain fifty elements never observed before. Of these, twenty-six have already been identified. The identified elements are hydrogen, helium, lithium, beryllium, boron, carbon, nitrogen, oxygen, fluorine, neon, sodium, magnesium, aluminum, silicon, phosphorus, sulphur, chlorine, argon, potassium, calcium, selenium, titanium, vanadium, chromium, manganes and iron.

The opinion is accordingly held that these with the 24 unidentified and possibly others in these nebulae are the same as those found on earth and in the sun and planets and that all the ninety-two elements present on earth are in these gaseous clouds just as they have already been found in the stars and sun. The report was presented by Dr. I. S. Bowen of the California Institute of Technology and Dr. A. B. Wyse of the Lick Observatory. The identified elements are in the same relative abundance it is believed as they are on earth, hydrogen being the most prominent, then helium, carbon, nitrogen, oxygen, and silicon possibly next.

Such discoveries do not weaken religion, rather they strengthen it. There is in every revelation of science the revelation of a Supreme Wisdom which was responsible for and which is guiding and governing the whole creation. The belief that man has a soul and that there is immortality readily coincides with the evidence in such discoveries of a regularity and progressiveness in nature.

SAND

I observed a locomotive in the railroad yard one day,
It was waiting in the roundhouse where the locomotives stay;
It was panting for the journey, it was coaled and fully manned,
And it had a box the fireman was filling full of sand!

It appears that locomotives cannot always get a grip
On their slender iron pavement, cause the wheels are apt to slip.
And when they reach a slippery spot their tactics they command
And to get a grip upon the rail they sprinkle it with sand.

It's about the way with travel along life's slippery track,
If your load is rather heavy you're always slipping back,
So if a common locomotive you completely understand
You'll supply yourself in starting with a good supply of sand.

If your track is steep and hilly and you have a heavy grade,
If those who've gone before you have the rails quite slippery made,
If you ever reach the summit of the upper table land
You'll find you'll have to do it with a liberal use of sand.

If you strike some frigid weather and discover to your cost
That you're liable to slip up on a heavy coat of frost,
Then some prompt decided action will be called into demand
And you'll slip way to the bottom if you haven't any sand.

If there's fire beneath the boiler of ambition's strong machine.
And you'll reach a place called Flushtown at a rate of speed that's grand
If for all the slippery places, you've a good supply of sand. —AUTHOR UNKNOWN.

TRUE OR NOT IT IS A GOOD STORY. Briefly it referred to the no-good son of a high railway executive. All efforts to interest the son in the workaday life having failed because of the attraction of Blondes and Bright Lights the father gave him a minor position as agent of a small station near a diamond crossing. He had not been there long when two trains came together with great damage to rolling stock and loss of life. The father called the son on the carpet and asked for an explanation of the accident. The son told of seeing the fast train approaching at a high rate of speed toward the diamond crossing as he looked out of the south window. Turning to the north window he saw the "Cannon Ball" rapidly approaching from the other direction. "Then what did you do or say," asked the father. "Oh," said the son. "I just took my feet from the desk and said, 'What a h—l of a way to run a railroad.' "

AN APPEAL FROM POPE PIUS TO MAKE MAY A MONTH OF PRAYER FOR WORLD PEACE is a notable addition to the common sense world movement to dispel the hysterical fog created by war mongers. The movement to be successful should centre in Rome and Berlin with Mussolini and Hitler leading in prayer. Both are ambitious—so was Caesar—both have fattened up armies for the kill and can't seem to see them fit in with a peace movement. The martial spirit has been kindled by parades, drums and band music and little thought is given to the blood and mud of the trenches. War is pictured to the youth of Europe, who knew not the last war, as a bright and glorious adventure, just a series of almost bloodless victories, all kinds of fun, loot, beer and skittles. The author who christened the turmoil in Europe "Insanity Fair" said something.

Camels on the Cariboo Trail

"Camels is all right if you keep 'em where they belong, but why bring the blankety-blank critters here, scarin' our mules half out of their wits?"

"You said it, Pard, the dang things uv' got no business being here!"

So fumed two hardy miners on the Cariboo trail in the early '60's. And they were not in the class of "Pink Elephant Sightseers' 'either.

It was no illusion, their scattered pack-train and ruined packs testified to the accuracy of their vision.

In the mad rush to reach the gold fields of the Cariboo, camels had been introduced as pack animals. Frank Laumeister was convinced, and reasonably too, that an animal capable of doing the work of about four mules, of travelling 40 miles a day, of being able to live on sage brush, and not needing water for seven days would be a valuable asset to any packtrain.

The "Dromedary Express" on the Cariboo trail in 1862 was a going concern for a year or so. Nor was it the severe climate that caused the bankruptcy of the firm, as would first be supposed. It was the havic wrought among the mule pack-trains that caused disruption of business.

These latter animals developed the strongest possible aversion to the camels. Nor was it the sight of these ungainly beasts that unnerved the otherwise stolid mule. The faintest suggestion of camel in the air was sufficient to start a stampede. This often resulted in the loss of both mules and packs, especially if the meeting took place in some of the narrow defiles on the Cariboo road.

Finally, an appeal to Governor Douglas was made, by the less romantic of the packers and merchantmen, to prohibit the use of these Arabian importations on the trails. Failing—this, several lawsuits were threatened against the enterprising Foreign Legion, and the owners saw fit to disband forces.

But the camels had their worries too. An animal with feet built to travel on sand had his own difficulties when asked to find his way over steep, rocky trails; over muddy and wet roads; and even through swamps. The Winters in the Cariboo were far too severe for the camels to be kept there the year round. They were wintered lower down on the Douglas trail. Even there, they adapted themselves marvellously to the climate, growing a thick coat of fur to protect themselves. The fodder for Winter was supplied by the owners. The rest of the year, the animals could and did forage for themselves, living much as the deer do.

The Cariboo venture did not at all discourage would-be camel-owners. Some of the original 21 were taken back to the coast and shipped to the United States. Others were turned out on the North Thompson River and allowed to wander free and unmolested. Of these, the last one ceased to terrorize mules and horses, to say nothing of unsuspecting hunters, about 1905. Then came the news of another gold strike in the interior of British Columbia.

Wild Horse Creek was on everyone's lips in 1864. The long and difficult packing in to the little town of Fisherville at the mouth of the creek again led men to speculate on improved methods of transportation. The solution was camels. Again the double humped pack-animals were seen swinging up and down the trails of B. C. They were used chiefly on the Hope to Kootenay road. Again they were ostracized because of the terror they inspired in the other animals.

For years one remained tied up at the top of the hill at Fort Steele, B. C., near Wild Horse Creek. —W. W. Bride in London Free Press.

SIGNING THE NAME

The same problems are common to editors in many lands. A North Carolina editor writes: "Every once in a while I meet somebody who suggests that I write an editorial expressing a certain opinion, I say, 'You write me a letter about that and sign it, and I'll be glad to print it.' At which he looks alarmed and says: 'Oh, no, I don't want to do that.' In other words he wants me to express his opinions over my name."—St. Mary's Journal Argus.

AN OLD FRIEND

The news from Astoria, Ore., makes us feel better. Captain Chris Anderson of the halibut schooner Argo reports a serpent — a monster with a 10-foot neck, a head like a camel's and eyes as big as hot cross buns.

Skeptics may raise their eyebrows as they read Skipper Anderson's account of how this creature emerged from the Pacific, within ten feet of the Argo's hull, nodded gravely to the fishermen and proceeded to swallow a 20-pound halibut.

But we choose to believe it, every word of it. Every day we are compelled to swallow facts that are much less palatable. And considering the way human beings are behaving, it's a relief to have a nice, gentle sea serpent in which to place our faith.—N. Y. World Telegram.

NEW TYPE ACTRESS

The time was, and not so long ago, when movie actresses were a pretty dull lot. An occasional juicy scandal, yes, but snappy quirks and quips, no. Happily all this is past. With the new sophistication that has come to the movies during the past 10 years, there has come also a new type of movie actress, witty and sometimes learned; to say nothing of socially conscious.

But for light-minded whimsy, Loretta Young has now taken the cake and a couple of blueberry pies to boot. She proposes that now that a Government is doing everything for everybody, it ought to make beauty treatments available to all women.

"I honestly believe", says the elfish Miss Young, who is fair to look upon, and ought to know, "that the turning of 10,000,000 homely women into beauties is a lot more important to the well-being of this country than the building of one medium-sized battleship. And it wouldn't cost as much."

WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

The reports which are being presented at the annual meetings of different branches of the Women's Institutes throughout the surrounding territory make it clear that these organizations which represent one of Canada's greatest contributions to rural welfare and improvement, have not lost their zest for service, which has been an important part of their activities since the time of their establishment.

All over Ontario, in cross-roads centres as well as in villages and sometimes fairly large towns, the Women's Institutes are continuing to devote themselves with all the vigor and resources at their command to betterment of conditions in the communities in which they are situated. They are doing so, not with the idea of benefitting themselves or gaining publicity for the movement with which they are connected, but to the end that the villages or other centres in which they are established may be better and happier places in which to live.

Life in many a rural centre has been all but transformed in consequence of the operation of an active and devoted Institute and what has been accomplished by these organizations frequently puts the efforts of men belonging to the same communities to shame. —Brockville Recorded-Times.

SWEET BAROMETER

One of the little barometers by which one can gauge whether people are prosperous or not is the consumption of ice cream, for ice cream is in great measure a luxury. At least it is one of the things that go by the board first when the family purse is scantily filled.

During the worst of the depression years the production of ice cream fell off considerably. In the more prosperous years of 1929 and 1930, just before the worst years set in, consumption for the whole of Canada went up to about 9,750,000 gallons, but in 1933, which is generally regarded as the most unhappy year, the production dropped down to 5,700,000 gallons.

After that the ice cream sales improved, and by 1937 had climbed back to 8,400,000 gallons. Quite evidently more youngsters were getting ice cream cones.

It is quite interesting to note, according to the 1937 figures, that the people of British Columbia favour ice cream more than those of any other province. They used 1.11 gallons per capita. Ontario came next with 1.05 and Nova Scotia third with .81. In order after Nova Scotia came Alberta with .67 of a gallon, New Brunswick .60, Manitoba .56, Quebec .51, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan .43 each. — Kitchener Record.

JIM HAM LEWIS

The news columns tell us that James Hamilton Lewis is dead. They tell us that those parted-in-the-middle pink whiskers grown grey have vanished from the American scene; that no more shall our eyes be gladdened by the pastel hues of waistcoat, cravat, kerchief and spats; no more shall our ears be charmed by the vibrant resonance of his polished oratory; no more the fascination of his courtly demeanor.

All this we refuse to believe. For Jim Ham has been more than a flesh-and-blood person, more than a national figure and world statesman. He has been, and remains, a legend. Legends never die. They live on in the folklore of a people.—N. Y. World-Telegram.

More Information on Cause and Treatment of Asthma and Hay Fever

Every year, physicians interested in hay fever and asthma await the report and findings of the Asthma Research Council of Great Britain. The regular London correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association reports that at the asthma clinic of St. Mary's Hospital, the work was principally on hay fever which is held to be closely related to asthma and urticaria (hives). It has been found that the pollen of any one of the English grasses serves to show whether or not the hay fever is due to grass pollen and a vaccine made from one grass will desensitize (stop the pollen from causing the symptoms) all hay fever.

Several cases were investigated in which there was some point of infection—teeth, tonsils, sinus, gall bladder—present, which complicated and added to the symptoms produced by the grass pollen. Where this infection was poisoning the system it was naturally a longer and more difficult process to desensitize the patient to the grass pollen.

It was found that emotional disturbances were a factor in causing asthmatic attacks, even hilarity accompanied by hearty laughter might start an attack of hay fever. Also an emotional attack may start an attack or the attack set up an emotional disturbance or neurosis.

I have spoken before of the benefits received in asthma by the use of breathing exercises—principally blowing breath out as hard and as long as possible.

"To be of use, these exercises must be properly taught and practised conscientiously. The results obtained were as follows—In about 40 per cent of the cases the asthma either disappeared or became so slight as not to inconvenience the patient. In about 30 per cent the condition was much improved and there remained 30 per cent of failures. Of the failures half were due to not applying themselves properly to the learning of the exercises.

These patients, who were selected to show the value of the breathing exercises, carried on at their usual employment and did not avoid food, feathers or dust to which they might be sensitive nor did they have vaccine treatment or operations on the nose. Any cure or improvement was thus entirely due to the breathing exercises.

A copy of the 'Breathing Exercises for Asthma' may be obtained by sending Twenty-Five Cents to The Asthma Research Council, King's College, Strand, London, W.C. 2, England.

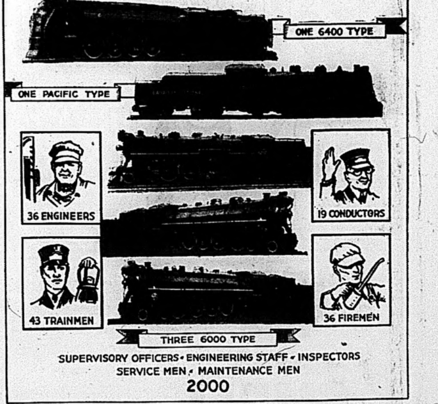
2000 Men, 4 Engines for Canadian National Movement of Royal Train



This diagrammatic outline summarizes man power and steam power required for the actual operation of the Royal Train during its movement over lines of the Canadian National Railways, but beyond those numbers representing men and power, even larger numbers of men will be employed to ensure the smooth despatch of the Royal Train. These other men will be along the right of way, in signal towers, despatchers' offices, at crossings, and extending further to engineering forces and supervisory officials. Even beyond that, other employees who participated in the preparation of the Royal Train included engineers, architects, decorators and a greatly diversified force of craftsmen engaged in work on the units of the Royal Train which were remodelled and redecorated in the shops of the Canadian National Railways. This work in the National System shops included the preparation of the cars in which Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, will actually travel. Four of the C.N.R. engines which will haul the Royal Train are being finished in Royal blue. A fifth engine, an oil burner, will be used to haul the train through the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Reid, Rawdon Celebrate Their Golden Wedding

Allan's Mills, (Special)—On April 24th at Elm-Hurst in Rawdon Township an event of more than usual importance was celebrated on Monday evening the occasion being the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore M. Reid who despite their age are yet hale and hearty, and look forward to spending many more years in the Hurst homestead. Many were prevented from attending owing to illness and condition of the roads.

Mrs. Reid wore black silk gorgette over flowered silk, and the groom's gift, a yellow gold locket with their pictures taken over 50 years ago. The bride and groom each wore golden flowers.

Golden tapers in brass candle sticks were on the tables, one pair coming from Ireland in a sail boat in 1823. The three tier wedding cake was also decorated in gold.

Among those present from a distance were Mrs. S. G. Woodward of Trenton, Mrs. J. S. Hurst and Bill, Mr. and Mrs. Don Hurst of Belleville, Miss Eleanor Green of Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. Phil Ray of Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. George Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Collins and Mr. and Mrs. Burley Reid of Peterboro, Mr. and Mrs. Alex McCurdy of West Huntingdon and Rev. and Mrs. Beckel of Stirling.

Theodore M. Reid and Nellie J. Hurst of Harold were united in wedlock by the Rev. T. H. McDonald then on the Rawdon circuit.

Only two guests were able to attend who witnessed the ceremony 50 years ago, being Mrs. J. S. Hurst, now of Belleville and Mrs. M. E. Hogle.

There are four daughters living and one daughter, Gladys deceased. Lena —Mrs. Arthur Burkitt, Bonarlaw; Ivah—Mrs. L. R. Green, Marmora; Hilda — Mrs. Harry Grills, Campbellford; Genevieve — Mrs. Hugh Collins, Peterboro.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid entered into the anniversary occasion with zest and merriment. Rev. Mr. Beckel acted as chairman in his usual jolly manner and conveyed felicitations and good wishes to the bride and groom on behalf of the guests, after which three grandchildren were baptized — Wm. Theodore Grills; Theodore George Collins and Jeannine Elleanor Gladys Collins.

A mock wedding was put on by the young people. Mr. Beckel then called on Mrs. Burkitt who read the address, and Mrs. Green presented Mr. Reid with a yellow gold watch chain. Mrs. Hugh Collins presented Mrs. Reid with a yellow gold wristlet and cameo ear rings. Mrs. Harry Grills presented the bride and groom with an aladdin lamp on behalf of the children and grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid made very suitable replies thanking their many friends. Mr. Beckel then called on Mr. Cotton, Mr. Thain, Mr. Wellman and Mr. McCurdy for speeches also some of the ladies who responded. Mr. and Mrs. Reid received many beautiful gifts.

A very dainty lunch of sandwiches, cake and coffee was served. The wedding cake being served on a cake plate, a wedding present of 50 years ago.

The following address was read:

Harold, April 22, 1939.

Dear father and mother:—

We your children and grandchildren have gathered in the old home tonight to celebrate with you the 50th anniversary of your marriage.

We are very thankful to the giver of all good gifts that you have both been spared to celebrate this day with us, and we hope and pray that you both may be spared to your family for many years to come.

We ask you, father, to accept this small remembrance from your family and may you be spared for many years to enjoy the same and mother, please accept these gifts in the spirit they have been given, and in loving remembrance of your children and grandchildren.

Signed Lena Burkitt, Ivah Green, Hilda Grills, Genevieve Collins.

Thousands Taught Home Nursing Care

That 5,751 women and girls had received instruction in the elementals of nursing science, maternity and infant care, resuscitation from drowning, and allied subjects, through 262 Red Cross Home Nursing Courses conducted in cities and towns of Ontario during the last fiscal year was reported recently by the Canadian Red Cross Society.

Efficiency counts in these days, even in the myriad tasks of a woman's everyday life, and women are fast reaching out for the training that makes for efficiency in those phases of their work which have hitherto been left in instinct and natural ability.

An instance of this, officials of the Society declared, was the eagerness with which women in all walks of life are taking up the Red Cross Home Nursing Classes, realizing that such training was a valuable asset not only in the emergencies which occasionally confront them, but in the natural course of a woman's life.

The care of the sick invariably falls to a woman's lot; but how few women really possess even an elementary knowledge of nursing, and there are thousands of mothers who are still ignorant of modern methods of infant feeding and care. Doctors and nurses particularly realise the need of these courses, and are giving heartily of their services through the Red Cross Society in the teaching of the classes.

The course itself comprises twelve lecture demonstrations—each lecture being separated from the next by such intervals that the whole course will be covered in approximately twelve weeks' time. Eight of the classes are taught by graduate nurses, three by doctors, and one by a graduate dietitian.

The instruction given is based on a manual prepared for this particular type of work. It is not intended for professional work, simply "home nursing" and mothercraft.

It is not surprising that a course so obviously helpful to women of all classes draws its members from all sections of Canadian life, and the Red Cross points out that any woman who avails herself of this training has made a great contribution to her efficiency as housewife and mother.

TWEED WOMAN GIVEN 30 DAYS

Mrs. Bertha L. Wright Convicted With Intent to Extort Money

Tweed, April 28—(Special)—Mrs. Bertha L. Wright, 38, of Tweed, was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail here Thursday afternoon by Magistrate J. L. Lloyd. Mrs. Wright was found guilty on two charges of threatening to accuse, with intent to extort money. She was sentenced to thirty days on each charge, to run concurrently.

It was charged that Mrs. Wright attempted to extort $250 from Guy Hughes, Stoco, and $275 from Thomas Blue, Madoc. In each case the woman wrote the men, who are proprietors of beverage rooms, demanding that the money be sent to her by Saturday, April 22, threatening to accuse them of selling liquor to persons under 21 years of age.

"I'm not doing this just for the money," read one of the letters, but Mrs. Wright was unable to explain what was meant by this remark when questioned in court "I would not have taken the money from these men if they had offered it to me. I merely wanted to talk to them regarding my daughter, who is 17 years of age, to keep her out of beverage rooms. On two occasions she came home half-drunk, and she told me that she had obtained beer at these places."

"You never thought of getting the police to keep your daughter away from the beverage rooms, did you?" asked Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan.

"No," was the reply.

SAYS ACCIDENTS MAY BE DUE TO LACK OF VITAMIN

Toronto, April 28—Some of the night traffic accidents are without doubt due to the lack of vitamin A in the blood-stream of the drivers involved, it was suggested yesterday by Dr. Marian S. Kimble and Dr. Edgar S. Gordon of the Departments of Medicine and Biochemistry of the University of Wisconsin at the meeting of the Federated Societies for Experimental Biology and Medicine.

The association of "night blindness" of all possible degrees with vitamin A deficiency in the system was now well established, they stated. And there was an increasing realization of the importance this relationship might bear to the frequency and prevention of night traffic accidnts.

SHE COULD NEITHER WALK NOR SLEEP

Arms and Feet Swollen with Rheumatism

This woman suffered for many years. Pain sapped her strength until she lost hope of recovery. Many remedies were tried, but nothing broke the grip of her crippling rheumatism. At last her husband persuaded her to try Kruschen Salts:—

"My arms and feet were swollen with rheumatism," she writes. "I could not walk nor get regular sleep, and nothing did me any lasting good. I was so hopeless of ever getting better, I lost my good nature entirely. Then my husband persuaded me to try Kruschen Salts. After two weeks I began to feel better. I persevered, and in six weeks, I was doing housework. Later, I was able to go for a walk. Now I am free from pain and I feel grand."—(Mrs.) F.W.

Rheumatism is commonly caused by deposits of uric acid crystals, which lodge in the muscles and joints. Kruschen helps to break up these deposits of troubling crystals and to convert them into a harmless solution, which is removed through the natural channel — the kidneys.

Tired After Hard Day? Try This Routine

MARY BETH HUGHES

Rest is Included in her beauty routine

By Helen Follett

When you are tired, your head full of worries and the big evening date is on, you have to do something to put yourself together again. No fun trailing out with your pretty feathers dragging.

Give yourself a tonic bath. Cold cream your face, put on your shower cap, step into a tub filled to the brim with water fairly hot. Dip the wash cloth in the water, hold it tight to your face. Go over the entire body with a well-soaped bathbrush, not only for the sake of cleanliness but to hustle up blood streams that are sluggish when you are fatigued. Close your eyes and rest for five minutes.

A cold shower should follow, also a brisk rubdown with a coarse towel that takes hold like the pangs of a guilty conscience. That's not all. Apply a skin tonic made for bathing beauties. The alcoholic content will bring a grand reaction.

Dip pads of gauze in witch hazel, place over the eyes, try to catch 40 winks. Allow plenty of time for making a pretty face for yourself with powder, rouge and lipstick. Put orchid shadows on your eyelids. Touch the eyebrows with brilliantine and put a little on your hair; it will give your beauty halo life and glitter.

There you are, zestful, animated, looking your best self, not afraid to face the other woman in your life.

Don't pass up the new neckwear. Nothing like soft fabrics at the neck to make one look young and dainty. If you have a short neck, select a V-shaped arrangement. If the neck is long you can regale yourself with a cavalier collar, adding cavalier cuffs to the long sleeves of your pretty frock.

Creamy tones are more flattering to the complexion than white unless one is a true blonde with fresh pink and gardenia skin. You will find organdy, georgette, nets and laces, neckwear of more varied designs than you ever dreamed of.

We must be grateful for fashions resurrected from the past; they make us fluffier than we have been for years.

PHILLIPSTON-ZION W. I.

The Phillipston-Zion Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. R. Bunnett on Thursday afternoon, April 20. The meeting opened with singing the Institute Ode followed by repeating the Lord's Prayer in unison. A paper was then given by Mrs. Earle Sayers on "Household Insects and Their Control" which was very instructive. This was followed by community singing. The roll call "Current Events" was well answered. Mrs. Harry Ketcheson then gave the topic "Organization of Household Work" which was very interesting and much appreciated by those present. Business was discussed and plans made for the district annual which will be held in Bethel Church the latter part of May. The treasurer's books were audited and found correct and the annual report read by Mrs. W. Phillips. Mrs. E. Sayers conducted the election of officers for 1939-40.

Technique of Vaccination Immeasurably Advanced over Earlier Procedures

As we go from school to school vaccinating the children to give them immunity to smallpox, we still find a few die-hard parents who won't allow us to vaccinate their children. Whatever the reason, we never insist on performing the deed, because if we did, and anything went wrong, we would be in for it.

When I suggest that something might go wrong, I really am referring to some outside dirt or infection getting into the vaccination. I know, myself, that in isolated cases when you bare a child's arm to vaccinate, you find that it has been a long, long time since it was washed. It is covered with dirt, and dead skin, and the clothing that covers it is far from clean. When this is the case, then the vaccination mark may become infected and cause trouble. But that's not the fault of the vaccination. Sometimes I am able to convince parents that this is the case, even after one of their children has been sick with a sore arm for quite a while.

Vaccination is very definitely the thing that has smallpox under control, and we mustn't forget it. My father, who practised medicine for fifty years, often told me about vaccination when he was young. In those days they would take threads which had been dipped in the pox taken from calves, make an incision in the arm and insert the threads. No part of this operation was very sterile but nevertheless it seemed to protect against smallpox, and people were so frightened of that ogre they would try almost anything to escape it.

When I was a boy, vaccination was a trifle crude, and no one seemed to think cleanliness meant much. I remember one old doctor, a veteran of the American Civil War, whose antiseptic ideas were vague. He would carry the vaccine points in his vest pocket, along with his matches and tobacco. Of course, when he vaccinated, the patients were amply protected against smallpox, but nearly always developed a mixed infection from other poisons on the vaccine points. Even this was sometimes used to advantage, for if a patient had a particularly sore arm and swollen arm, he was told that if he had ever caught smallpox it would have been a serious case.

They used to think then that if you had a great big mark on your arm, the vaccination took better. It took all right, but it sometimes gave trouble for weeks. Today we put a tiny, almost invisible scratch on the arm, and deposit sterile antitoxin in it. We don't even draw blood in the operation. Yet the patient is just as well protected as though we had scarified a surface as big as a dollar and rubbed vaccine all through it.

Bachelor Complains That Girls Are So Avid for Marriage He Can't Keep a Playmate

Dear Miss Chatfield

I believe the girls have gone absolutely wild on the subject of marriage. I'm a young bachelor just getting started in life and I have made up my mind that I won't be hooked until I'm able to support a wife. Naturally I didn't expect to state my platform to every date but the girls push a fellow so fast these days he has to warn them that there's no sale. One after another three girls have driven me off by harping on marriage. I liked all three and maybe I would have fallen in love with anyone of them but I was scared to stick around. On the second or third date they begin to get serious and a guy has to be good to switch the subject. Don't think I'm conceited. I understand that it's not love but ambition to get married that makes them so wild. Now why is it and what is a guy to do?

R. S.

Brother, my sympathy is with the girls for a guy can always do what you have done; run when the girl is closing in on him. It happens every day. Coincidently this week I have had two pitiful letters from girls who had lost their prospects and both of them admitted that they had pushed too fast, overplayed their hands.

I don't think girls are more keen to get married nowadays than they're ever been but they've merely exposed their zeal, brought their ambitions into the open, laid away their old fashioned feminine delicacy with their red flannels. There is a lot of loose talk going around about the girl's right to step up and take the husband as she has stepped up to take the job! This being exactly what she wants to do, she has swallowed the talk whole and set out to take the husband without considering his reaction to her aggressive methods.

Gal children, you know, are not given to moderation in any undertaking and when society has seemed to give them an inch they've taken an ell. With the vote, the pay envelope and the urge to get the man, they've gone hog-wild, forgetting that each advantage they have gained has been at the expense of the men. They don't realize that when they exercise their new found prerogatives they are sort of rubbing it in.

As nearly as I can make out, the modern man is quite willing for a girl to work, to vote and to chase him, provided she turns around and runs back every now and then to make him think he's doing the chasing. And it is a stupid girl who forgets to run back. If that little play-act pleases the man it also salves her pride and satisfies her hunger for romance. The modern girl has both, though her impatience sometimes betrays her into hocking them.

The reasons for her impatience are pretty clear. It takes a long time these days for the young man to get his financial stance, an increasingly long time as the days go by. Until he falls in love the man doesn't care whether it's a matter of three years or ten but those years make an awful lots of difference to a girl who wants to get settled before she's counted a spinster. So it's not surprising that she sometimes pushes too fast and loses her prospect.

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

Just get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a reliable "WOMAN'S" tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and those disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life.

Pinkham's is WELL WORTH trying.

Cosmetic Props Can Flatter or Mar Appearance — It All Depends on Use

JEANETTE MACDONALD . . her cosmetic props flatter her beauty.

By HELEN FOLLETT

It is the abuse of make-up that raises the whirlwind of criticism, not the use of it.

Here are some abuses:

Powder that isn't evenly distributed but shows up in spots.

Bright red splotches on the cheeks.

Lip smears that trickle over onto white surfaces.

Eye shadows that make a woman look as if she were raised from the dead because they are too heavy or not applied with cosmetic skill.

The purpose of all beauty props is to flatter, to enhance, make the face vivid and interesting. They do just that if one has the seeing eye, has found out what colors are becoming. They put the cream on the sweetie-cake that is Woman.

The synthetic complexion that conforms to pulchritude laws of this particular moment is soft and subtle, delicate and effective. Powder must be the slightest bit darker than the skin, should impart a rich creaminess if one is blonde, be creamy and slightly rosy if one is a brunette. Startling red lipsticks have given way for natural tones; lips are not broadened or over-accentuated.

Rouge is taking time off, but there are women whose natural pallor calls for the commercial blush and it is their privilege to continue to use it. Eye shadows are only for evening, even then must consist of a light film, doing a modest fadeaway at the far corners of the soul window shutters.

Select a small toothbrush; you'll find it more thorough in its work than a large one, especially when it is used on the inner surfaces of the teeth.

Manipulate it gently. Many a case of receding gums has been caused by harsh movements with a brush of thick, heavy bristles. Work from the base of the tooth toward the end with a rolling movement.

Brush your teeth after breakfast, not before; brush before going to bed. Those are the rules laid down by speakers at a recent convention of dentists. Give your teeth a polish. Rinse the mouth afterwards to flush away foreign particles that the brush has dislodged.

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

To Sneak or Not to Sneak

How can a girl make a confidante of a mother who insists she was a thirty-third degree angel when she was young? I get a good many letters from angels' daughters and it would take the wisdom of Solomon to answer them.

"When I was a girl," mother begins, "no decent girl ever thought of smoking, drinking or petting. I never kissed your father until after we were engaged. I never went to an evening affair, or on a picnic, without a chaperon. My mother knew where to find me every hour of the twenty-four."

At the end of these holier-than-thou confidences, the modern girl is dumb, and any further talk about her problems is out of the question. She feels anyone as far removed from modern life as her mother could never understand, and for them to meet on common ground would be impossible.

Even supposing that mother was the bright, glittering angel she paints herself, it's a mistake to hand out a 1916 model in 1939. It clamps the silencer on a girl's lips and widens the breach between the two people who, in all the world, should have sympathy and understanding.

The morning's mail brought a letter which had both its comic and tragic side. A high school girl writes to say that smoking is her passport to a certain set she has grown up with, since kindergarten days. Some of these young people drink, some pet, but all smoke. There are non-drinkers, non-petters, but no non-smokers. And if she doesn't take a whiff occasionally, just to show she isn't too old-fashioned, they'll regard her as just too goody-goody to belong.

She's 18, and doesn't care particularly about smoking. Smoking is just so much window-dressing for her. She'd like to flash a smart cigarette case and light a weed with the rest of the crowd, but when she talked this over with her mother, that good lady dissolved in tears and said she'd rather see her daughter in her grave than to see her smoke.

The girl, promised that she would neither drink nor pet, and in this abstinence she'd have plenty of company, but smoking, it seems, is essential to belonging to her group.

For smoking to be the passport to certain groups implies an utter lack of humor to me. Some people just don't like tobacco, just as they don't like spinach, so why make it obligatory? Some of those diabolical old sirens, whose memoirs we read today didn't smoke, but they did things a hundred times worse.

Why, as a symbol of sophistication, do young people insist on smoking? That seems as absurd to me as if they insisted that every girl should wear the same size shoe or all girls wear those terrible little saucer hats perched upon chimneys, which we see today.

Why didn't this girl's mother just laugh about the absurdity of flaunting cigarettes to prove emancipation? She took to tears instead, and the girl, seeing all hopes of companionship vanish, decided to sneak her smokes.

She has a lovely cigarette case. It's not really silver and malachite, as it's supposed to be; it's just make-believe. Perfectly good enough to flaunt, however. And when she comes home from meeting the bunch, she's careful to rinse out her mouth with an aromatic wash, so that her mother may not guess she's been smoking.

The difficulty with this girl is that when the time comes around for her to entertain the club, she doesn't know how she'll meet the emergency, because mother won't let them smoke. And having sneaked in the first place, and taken up smoking on the sly, she's now confronted with a lot of whoppers she's got to tell in the way of excuses.

How much more sensible it would have been if this angel-mother had stepped down from her pedestal and talked the thing out with her daughter, pointing out the humor of an organization which insists on smoking whether you like it or not.

Great News for People With INDIGESTION

Do you know what happens inside your stomach when it refuses to deal properly with food? Those unbearable pains you get are caused by excess acid. There is more acid in your stomach than is needed for proper digestion. And what is this acid doing? It is irritating and inflaming your stomach walls. It is fermenting food wastes—building up gas to press upon nerve centres and so cause heartburn and those other pains you are all too familiar with. Stomach specialists know this—and they always prescribe four powerful alkalies as treatment. You can get exactly this same treatment by taking Maclean Brand Stomach Powder. These same alkalies, in perfect balance in Maclean Brand Stomach Powder, usually relieve stomach pains at once. They put a soothing coating over the inflamed stomach lining. Then digestion comes back to normal. You lose your fear that food means pain. Get Maclean Brand Stomach Powder from your druggist, in bottles in cartons 75c. Never sold loose. And look for the signature "Alex. C. Maclean" which must appear on every bottle and carton. Maclean Brand Stomach Powder is not genuine without this signature. 120

New families of foxes gladden the hearts, and costumes, of milady. One of the latest pelts results from a merging of the red and the silver fox families. The shadings are exquisite.

Just right for wear with a tailored suit is a miniature tricorne of black felt or straw, its crown encircled by a white pique band with crisp pique bows. The hat is tied up in a filmy veil.

A good rest at home calls for a comfy housecoat. A beauty, nice for lounging or for dinner at home, has a gypsy striped skirt, the stripes in chevron formation done in brilliant and contrasting colors. The shirtwaist top picks up the color of the stripe. Done in various fabrics with a zipped closing.

A garden all a bloom best describes the new flower print nighties. Done in sheer silk or batiste, they look for all the world like summer evening frocks. A flower pattern in blue and white is used for a square-necked gown with a wide hem ruffle flounce. Val type lace outlines the neck and forms tiny ruffles on the bodice. Tiny blue velvet bows are further trim.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A young friend of mine a June-bride-elect, at her engagement announcement party this week showed the grace and originality for which she is famous among her friends. As each guest entered the living room, he or she was handed a little book of matches, white with gold lettering . . very bridey-looking. In the upper left corner diagonally, was the first name of the fiancee; in the lower right corner, diagonally, was the first name of the fiance. Across the centre, and also in gold lettering, the happy news It's a Match.

The "at home" invitation to the party, written on the visiting-card of the girl's parents had given no hint that this was to be an engagement-announcement party, so there was a delighted rush to reach the receiving-line and to offer "best wishes" to Mary and "congratulations" to John.

"Come in the evening, or come in the morning. Come when you're looked for, or come without warning", may be a grand idea, for poetry, but too often, alas, when guests descend "without warning" prosaic reality rears its ugly head. Every hostess, especially one who lives in the suburbs or in the country, is faced with the problem of receiving guests who make a habit of dropping in. It's admirable for a hostess and host to be hospitable, but the inconsiderate guest who takes advantage of this hospitality by being dropper-iner, is a social menace. Before we obey that impulse to take a hostess unawares we should at least telephone to inquire if our visit is convenient.

On a radio program the other evening, there was a thought-compelling bit of dialogue:
"When you're passing by, drop in.
When you're dropping in, pass by."

Norma Burns, famous for her analysis of character through a scientific study of the hands, says, "When you get a limp hand in return for your hearty handshake, it does not mean that the person is lacking in character. It indicates rather a dislike of physical effort, a desire to drift idly along with the current. Its owner may talk a great deal, even use his brain if necessary, but he is naturally lazy and sometimes selfish."

I've always maintained that handshakes are tattletales of character. . . as well as of manners. Have you analyzed your handshake?

The quality of Marian Anderson's taste is obviously as magnificent as in her voice. The famous Negro contralto did not lose her poise, did not "stoop to conquer", during the storm that followed the D.A.R.'s decision to bar her from singing in Constitution Hall in Washington. And what a triumphant reward for her manifestation of good taste: 75,000 rapt listeners at her Easter concert in Washington (appropriately she stood before the statue of Abraham Lincoln); and the announced possibility of her singing at the White House before King George VI and Queen Elizabeth!

RECIPROCAL ASSURANCES

REPEATS HIS GUARANTEE.

To France Hitler repeated his guarantee to respect Alsace-Lorraine as French territory. The territory was won by Germany in the War of 1870 and regained by France in the Great War.

Answering President Roosevelt's non-aggression proposals he declared himself willing to give to other nations assurances of non-aggression on the condition of absolute reciprocity, and provided the States in question desired it.

"The German Government is prepared to give to each of the States named (by Roosevelt) an assurance of the kind desired by Mr. Roosevelt on the condition of absolute reciprocity provided that the State wishes it and itself addresses to Germany a request for such an assurance together with appropriate proposals," the German Fuehrer said.

MAKE TERMS WITH EACH STATE.

"As for the duration of these agreements Germany is willing to make terms with each individual state in accordance with the wishes of that State."

Hitler drove through cold, rain-swept streets to the Reichstag session to answer the message of President Roosevelt of April 15 proposing non-aggression pledges by Germany and Italy to thirty-one nations.

He arrived at Kroll Opera House, the meeting place, at noon and began speaking nine minutes later (6:09 a.m. E.S.T.). Despite the rain, he drove to the Opera House in an open car.

Air Minister Hermann Wilhelm Goering opened the session with a silent tribute to deputies who had died since the last meeting and with greeting to seven new members from the territory newly incorporated in the Reich—Memelland and Bohemia and Moravia.

Neither Ambassador Present

Neither the British Ambassador, Sir Nevile Henderson, nor French Ambassador Robert Coulondre — both of whom returned to Berlin only this week after absences of more than a month following German absorption of Czecho-Slovak territory—were present at the session. Sir George Ogilvie-Forbes, Charge D'Affaires of the British Embassy, represented Britain but no French or Polish diplomat was noted in the diplomatic circle.

Acting Charge D'Affaires Raymond Geist and Donald Heath represented the United States.

Hitler first called upon the Reichstag to ratify or reject his answer to the United States President and then launched into a recital of his aims in Europe.

The first applause came when he said, "I merely restored to the German people what others had broken by force. I have not taken any step that violated foreign rights but have merely restored the rights violated 20 years ago."

Assurances Given

The Fuehrer gave specific assurances regarding the American continent.

"I should not like to let this opportunity pass without giving above all to the President of the United States an assurance regarding those territories which would after all give him the most cause for apprehension, namely the United States itself and other states of the American continent.

"And I here solemnly declare that all the assertions which have been circulated in any way concerning an impending German attack or invasion on or in American territory are rank frauds and gross untruths, quite apart from the fact that such assertions, as far as the military possibilities are concerned could have their origin only in a stupid imagination."

Brian Notified of Change

Hitler declared that the basis for the naval treaty with Great Britain, limiting the Reich's navy to 35 per cent of the British, had been removed and that he had notified the British government to that effect.

"Since England today, both by the press and officially, upholds the view that Germany should be opposed under all circumstances and confirms this by the policy of encirclement known to us, the basis for the naval treaty has been removed.

"I have therefore resolved to send today a communication to this effect to the British government.

"This is not a matter of practical, material importance to us—for I still hope that we shall be able to avoid an armaments race with England—but an action of self respect.

"Should the British government, however, wish to enter once more into negotiations with Germany on this problem no one would be happier than I at the prospect of still being able to come to a clear and straight-forward understanding."

Regarding Poland, Hitler reiterated his view that "necessity of a free access to the sea for the Polish state cannot be ignored."

He further declared that nations which, like Poland and Germany, were "condemned to live side by side would be well advised not to make life still harder for each other artificially and unnecessarily."

Discloses Concrete Offer

Regarding Danzig, Hitler for the first time publicly disclosed the concrete offer made to the Polish government. It was:

1. Danzig's return as a free state into the framework of greater Germany.

2. Germany to receive a route through the Corridor and a railway line at her own disposal possessing the same extra-territorial status for Germany as the Corridor itself has for Poland.

In return, Hitler said, he was prepared to recognize all Polish economic rights in Danzig, to assure a free harbor in Danzig for Poland, to accept the present boundaries between Poland and Germany as ultimate, to conclude a 25-year non-aggression treaty with Poland and to guarantee the independence of Slovakia by Germany, Poland and Hungary jointly.

Poland Rejects Offer

Poland, Hitler said, "has rejected my offer and has only declared that it is prepared to negotiate concerning the question of a substitute for the commissioners of the League of Nations and to consider facilities for the transit traffic through the Corridor."

Hitler referred to Czecho-Slovakia's fate, saying of Poland's rejection:

"The worst is that now Poland, like Czecho-Slovakia a year ago, believes under the pressure of a lying international campaign that it must call up troops, although Germany on her part has not called up a single man and had not thought of proceeding in any way against Poland."

The Polish-German pact, he held, had been infringed by Poland and thereby becomes void.

No Longer in Existence

"I look upon the agreement which Marshal Pilsudski and I at one time concluded as having been unilaterally infringed by Poland and thereby no longer in existence. I have sent a communication to this effect to the Polish government."

The Polish German non-aggression agreement was concluded in January, 1934.

To France he repeated his guarantee to respect Alsace-Lorraine as French territory.

"I have not as France did in 1870-71, described the cession of Alsace-Lorraine as intolerable for the future but have drawn a difference between the Saar territory and the two former imperial (German) provinces," the Fuehrer declared.

"I have never changed my attitude nor will I ever do so."

Further developing his attitude toward Britain, Hitler said:

"If England perchance thinks she may look upon Germany as a vassal state then our love and friendly feelings have indeed been wasted on England. Our self-esteem is just as great as that of an Englishman for England. We Germans do not feel in the least inferior to the British nation."

Further Explanation

In further explanation of his renouncing the Anglo-German naval accord Hitler said he had "heard the statement of the British Prime Minister to the effect that he is not able to put any trust in German assurances."

"Under the circumstances," the Fuehrer said, "I consider it a matter of course that we no longer wish to expect him (Prime Minister Chamberlain) or the British people to bear the burden of a situation which is only conceivable in an atmosphere of mutual confidence."

Without naming Rumania but obviously referring to her, Hitler declared that "Germany is determined not to allow certain economically important markets to be stolen from her by terroristic intervention or threats."

Criticizes Jews

"How often," he asked, "have we the pleasure of reading the amateurish economic articles of our democratic newspapers that Germany, because she maintains close relations with a country, makes that country dependent upon her? This is sheer hair-raising Jewish nonsense."

In his direct replies to the points of Roosevelt's message, Hitler did not disclose how many of the 31 nations enumerated by the President replied to the German questionnaire asking them if they felt themselves threatened. He merely said "the reply was in all cases negative, in some instances strongly so."

"I could not cause inquiries to be made of certain of the states and nations mentioned because they themselves, as for example Syria, are at present not in possession of their freedom but are occupied and consequently deprived of their rights by the military agents of democratic states," he declared.

Caustic Rejoinder

Roosevelt's inclusion of Eire in the list evoked this caustic rejoinder:

"I have just read a speech delivered by Mr. De Valera (Prime Minister Eamon De Valera of Eire) in which, strangely enough, and contrary to Mr. Roosevelt's opinion, he does not charge Germany with oppressing Ireland but reproaches England with subjecting Ireland to continuous aggression at her hand.

"With all due respect to Mr. Roosevelt's insight into the needs and cares of other countries it may, nevertheless, be assumed that the Irish Taoiseach (Prime Minister) will be more familiar with the dangers which threaten his country than the President of the United States."

Hitler also charged Roosevelt with failing to notice "that Palestine is at present occupied not by German troops but by the English and that the country is suffering the cruelest maltreatment for the benefit of interlopers."

Proposition Countered

Roosevelt's suggestion that disarmament or limitation of armaments be discussed at a world conference was countered by Hitler's presentation of an imposing array of statistics showing what Germany did between 1919 and 1923 to get rid of her guns.

Nevertheless, the Fuehrer expressed his willingness to join in disarmament discussions provided "Mr. Roosevelt, you do not appeal first to me and Germany but rather to the others. I have a long line of practical experience behind me and shall remain skeptically inclined until reality has taught me to know better."

To Roosevelt's proposal for discussion looking toward improvement of international trade, Hitler replied in part:

"It is my belief, Mr. Roosevelt, that it would be a great service if you with your great influence would remove the barriers to a genuinely free world trade beginning with the United States."

Derides Conferences

Hitler's derision of international conferences was epitomized in the following:

"In almost 20 years of the activity of the greatest conference in the world, namely the League of Nations, it has proved impossible to solve one single, decisive, international problem."

Germany never will enter a conference defenceless, Hitler said and confirmed his decision by this solemn oath:

"I can assure you, Mr. Roosevelt, that I am steadfastly determined to see to it that at all times and for ever, every German negotiator should and shall have behind him the united strength of the German nation, so help me God."

No Tribunals Again

"German representatives will never again enter a conference that for them is a tribunal. For who is to be the judge there?"

To Roosevelt's request to Germany and Italy for a statement of their foreign policy Hitler replied: "We, on our side, might with the same right address to the President of the American republic the question as to what aims the American foreign policy has in view and on what intention this policy is based—in the case of the Central and South American states for instance."

This counter question was purely rhetorical, however, for Hitler added, "I obviously would never presume to address such a request to the President of the United States because I assume that he would probably rightly consider such a presumption tactless."

Hitler appealed to Roosevelt to redeem the promises of President Wilson on the basis of which "Germany once laid down her arms."

"I am thinking less," the Fuehrer said "of the innumerable millions extorted from Germany as so-called reparations than of the territories stolen from Germany.

"In an outside Europe Germany lost approximately 3,000,000 square kilometres (1,158,000 square miles) of territory and that in spite of the fact that the whole German colonial empire, in contrast to [illegible] colonies of other nations, was not acquired by way of war but solely through treaties or purchase.

Speaks of Wilson

"President Wilson solemnly pledged his word that German colonial claims, like all others, would receive the same just examination. Instead of this the German possessions were given to nations, who have always had the largest colonial empire."

Hitler contended that Nazi Germany never acted contrary to binding declarations made to other states and cited the Scandinavian States as proof of this assertion.

"I have given binding declarations to a large number of states. None of these states can complain that even a trace of a demand contrary thereto has ever been made to them by Germany.

"None of the Scandinavian statesmen, for example, can contend that a request ever has been put to them by the German government or by German public opinion which was incompatible with the sovereignty and integrity of their state."

The Fuehrer said he was pleased at the desire for absolute mutuality on the part of the Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland and Denmark.

Contrasts Achie[illegible]

In a 10-minute apotheosis at the conclusion of his address, Hitler contrasted his achievements amidst many difficulties with the task of President Roosevelt.

With an [illegible] tone of irony he said: "Mr. Roosevelt, I fully understand that the vastness of your nation and the amount of wealth in your country allow you to feel responsible for the history of the whole world, [illegible] the fate of all nations. I sir, am placed in a much more modest and smaller sphere....

"As a precaution against the threat of another war, I have not only united [illegible] German peoples politically but have also rearmed them, I have also endeavored to [illegible] sheet by sheet that treaty, which in its 4[illegible]th article contains the vilest oppression which peoples and human beings have ever been expected to put up with....

"Mr. Roosevelt, I have endeavored to attain all this without spilling blood and without bringing to my people and consequently to others the misery of war.

"I, who 21 years ago was an unknown worker and soldier of my people, have attained this, Mr. Roosevelt, by my own energy and can therefore, in the face of history, claim a place among those men who have done the utmost which can fairly and justly be demanded from a single individual.

"You, Mr. Roosevelt, have a much easier task in comparison from the very outset you stepped to the head of one of the largest, wealthiest states in the world....

"Although the population of your country is scarcely one third greater than that of greater Germany you possess more than 15 times as much living space.

"Conditions prevailing in your country are on such a large scale that you can find time and leisure to give your attentions to universal problems. Consequently, the world is undoubtedly so small for you that you, perhaps, believe that your intervention and action can be effective everywhere."

Goering Closes Session

Before he directly answered President Roosevelt Hitler devoted considerable time to justifying Germany's action in dismembering the Czecho-Slovak state. The arguments, however, merely reiterated what Hitler and Nazi commentators have been saying ever since Bohemia and Moravia became a German protectorate and Slovakia, a vassal of greater Germany.

Goering in closing the session addressed Hitler:

"My Fuehrer! You said you wanted the Reichstag to give its answer to Roosevelt's message.

"My Fuehrer! Whatever you say and do, our confidence and that of our people is unlimited. Sieg Heil (hail victory)."

Goering declared the Reichstag session closed at 2:30 p.m. (8:30 a.m. EST) Hitler left amidst the thunderous heils of the deputies.

Treasurer of Bath Is Under Arrest

Napanee, April 28—Charged with the misappropriation of funds totalling nearly $15,000, Merton H. Mellow, of Bath, tax collector of that village and Amherst Island township, was arrested by Provincial Constable F. W. Barrett Thursday afternoon.

He was remanded in custody for one week. Tentative bail of $20,000 was set by E. J. Pollard, J.P., but the granting of bail was strongly opposed by County Crown Attorney Kenneth C. Ham.

The shortages, alleged to have been found by auditors during the recent equalization proceedings and when the adjustment of the Amherst Island arrears were being made with the county, were reported to have dated back over a period of seven years. Eleven thousand dollars of the alleged deficit is on the Amherst Island roll. Mellow was appointed tax-collector of both municipalities in 1931. He is a married man, 48, and operates a grist mill at Bath.

THE GOLDEN GIRL

—by—

Agnes Louise Provost and Ladbroke Black

"Jack, don't you want a partner?"

Something in the quick warmth of his eyes told her that at last the barrier of her fortune was down. He no longer felt the sting of it, and would not, because they would be working together

"I don't know anyone that I'd rather have," he said soberly, and the firm of Moreland signed its contract then and there, not, perhaps, in a way that is usual among business partners, but one that was eminently satisfactory to both of them.

CHAPTER XXX

Later Jack and Gloria went back to Beechwood through the woodland paths by which she had come. Gossipy little leaves rustled beneath their feet, whispering wonderful news to one another; the golden haze of Indian summer crept through the thinning branches and mellowed the distant views. They strolled on, building air castles, painting dream pictures, dropping now and then into silences of wonderful content.

Sara Dalton saw them coming hand in hand like children, and although she was not a tearful person she mopped her eyes thankfully. Then Gloria was upon her, half crying, hugging her tempestuously and whispering that Sara was never to leave them, never, because she and Jack had it all planned. And Sara made another furtive dab with her handkerchief as Jack came up, with a handclasp that made her fingers tingle.

"If you ever leave Beechwood," Gloria said joyfully, "we'll kidnap you and bring you back. Won't we, Jack?"

A little twist of the lips was Sara's only betrayal of emotion.

"I'd rather be here," she said, "than any other place on earth. I've found my work and my work's found me. Now, Glory dear, do go and answer that telephone. That French maid of yours has been calling up every ten minutes to find if you are back yet. She wants to implore your forgiveness for being away when your message came, but she was busy eloping with Monsieur Edson, and will mademoiselle ever forgive her? I told her I was pretty sure you would, but she and Edson keep calling. I think they work in relays."

"Poor Cecile!" Gloria went, laughing. She felt on wings.

A moment later Cecile's excited chatter came to her, a Cecile "desolated" because she had not been there to receive mademoiselle's orders, but—

"I understand, Cecile, and I am delighted to hear your good news. And it is all right about the trunks —I have changed my mind about having them sent to the station. Tell Edson to take the car for your honeymoon and charge all expenses to me. Tell him that my husband, Mr. Moreland — remember the name, Cecile—joins me in congratulating him. We hope that you will both want to stay with us here at Beechwood .... And Cecile, take plenty of time for I shall be away on a honeymoon too. Good-by."

She hung up the receiver and came out smiling to herself, to find a big Packard at the door and most of the Daimler family in it. She heard Bill speaking.

"And when the afternoon papers came out with all the scareheads about Gorham's arrest and suicide, and how he had been mixed up with Parsons in swindling your aunt, we started out to hunt for you, and found from the Garrett-Hudson people that you had answered a hurry call to Beechwood. So we posted after you."

Jack saw Gloria coming.

"It was mighty fine of you to be so interested", he said simply, "and because you are the best friends I have, I want you to be the first to meet my wife."

For an instant Bill Daimler whitened, but he was too good a sportsman not to lose gallantly. He held out his hand.

"You are a lucky man, Jack. And, Gloria, I don't need to tell you that the isn't a better fellow in the world."

Her quick glance begged forgiveness for any hurt she might have caused him, but Sophie, only half aware of her brother's feeling for Gloria, was chattering excitedly as she sprang out of the car.

"Glory, I think, it is the most romantic thing I ever heard of! When were you married, and why didn't you tell me!"

"Last May."

There was a moment of silence. Even Sophie, in her astonishment, had nothing to say. Gloria could imagine what the stately Mrs. Daimler would think of a secret marriage.

"You see," said Jack quietly, "there were reasons why the marriage could not be announced at once. But we are going to do that now."

Mrs. Daimler rose majestically to the occasion. In her secret heart she was fond of both of them.

"I will give a reception for you as soon as the honeymoon is over," she announced firmly, solidly conscious of her own power to introduce this pair of babes in the woods properly. "And if you have not already arranged for your announcements, Sophie and I will attend to that at once. Come, Sophie. It's getting late. Good-by, my dears."

The automobile slipped away amid a chorus of good-bys and Jack and Gloria looked at each other and smiled.

Sara had considerately disappeared, and they were alone again.

"Glory, have you been to the apartment since that first time?"

"Only for mail. But I went there the day that you were hurt. I couldn't bear to go anywhere else after I left you."

"Let's go now. The roadster is here and I dare you to elope with me."

Gloria's eyes shone.

"I'd love to. It is the only place that is just ours, but people would think we were crazy to leave a place like Beechwood and go to a city apartment."

"Let them. It's our honeymoon, not theirs."

"I'll be ready in five minutes."

A little later, trim and ready for travel, Mrs. John Moreland appeared again. Jack helped her into the roadster with a gentle touch on her arm, slipped in beside her and they were off, out of the Beechwood gates, down the long grey road, with the autumn air brushing their faces an the roadster humming its steady song.

They were eloping again, but with a difference.

An ocean liner went down the bay and out through the Narrows with the afterglow of sunset on her funnels. There had been dock troubles and the Nivernaise had been late in sailing. On the promenade deck Mrs. Dick Payne sat apart from her fellow passengers, looking back at the dimming outlines of towers and tall buildings, a dream city in the fading light, inexorably slipping away from her. In her lap lay several afternoon papers.

The line of Mrs. Payne's pretty lips hardened, but she looked down at the papers with a shudder. She hated them, but she had read every word. Jack Moreland's name had figured largely in the story, as had Miss Endicott's and that of the unspeakable Parsons who had murdered her, but there was no mention of her own. Jack had kept his word.

Still she had not dared to stay. She could not stay and meet Jack's level quiet glance again, nor see him on the street, in the houses of his friends and hers, and with Gloria. Sooner or later, she knew, she would have to take up a morning paper and open it to read: "Mr. and Mrs. John Moreland—"

No, she could not endure that. And the growing conviction that he had never cared greatly for her outside of the affection of mere propinquity only added to the bitterness. There had been a time when his aunt had assiduously thrown them together. He had liked her; he had been interested enough to be flatteringly attentive. That was all. There had not been a moment since her return when she could strike the faintest spark from him.

The paper crumpled under her hand. Beaten, trapped, saved from humiliating exposure only by the generosity of a man she had failed to win, she was now a restless exile on a paltry income.

Mrs. Payne closed her eyes.

When she opened them again the city of a million lights was only a handful of stardust against the night.

On the road between Beechwood and New York the roadster hummed steadily. It was growing dusk, and Jack showed a genius for finding shadowy and little frequented roads.

"Glory."

"Yes, Jack."

"I can drive with one hand."

"Jack! There comes a Ford with a nice old farmer in it. You've scandalized him."

"Glory, here's a roadster with a bride and groom in it. Bet you a dime the farmer feels twenty years younger and remembers to kiss his nice old wife when he gets home."

"Will you remember to kiss me when I'm a nice old lady?"

"I'll remember now."

formance.

"Jack!"

The roadster slowed down. It almost seemed to stop itself in friendly sympathy with young love and lovers. It was a shady stretch with high bushes by the roadside and trees above it with flaming foliage.

"You and I together, Glory, down the long road, rich or poor, from sunrise to sunset. That's all I ask of the world."

THE LAST VISIT

On a January day in 1641 there was a loud knock at the entrance to the House of Commons in London's Westminster Hall. Charles I thereupon walked in, the first time a King of England had ever been present at a sitting of the Commons. It was also the last, for, to protect members in the right of free speech, tradition had ruled, even before Charles's time, that the ruling monarch must stay away from the House. His family, however, may attend, and last week Queen Elizabeth exercised this privilege. It was one of her rare appearances in the gallery.

The Queen had come to the House to hear debate on a measure in which she has been interested. Should war come to Britain, one of the civilian problems would be suitable refuges from the dangers of air attack. Refuges for children have been a particular problem. One solution, the billeting of city children in country homes, has met with considerable opposition from home owners. Another proposal is for the establishment of permanent camps that would be refuges in wartime and vacation spots in peacetime. It was debate on this latter proposal that brought Queen Elizabeth to Westminster. — New York Times.

National League Distinguished For the Number and Length Of Its Extra-Inning Games

Nine Marathon Matches Stages Since Opening of Season

DETROIT BEATEN

Pittsburgh Defeated in 11 Frames for Seventh Straight Loss

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer).

Before it's completed this Major League baseball campaign may be remarkable for many things, but right now it is distinguished for the number and length of its extra inning games.

In 11 days, during which many contests were rained out, there have been nine marathon matches. The list was padded yesterday by the 13-inning duel Chicago White Sox claimed from Detroit Tigers and the 11-inning thriller St. Louis Cardinals took from Pittsburgh Pirates.

It was the third meeting of the two American League clubs this season and the second time they have worked overtime. One of the two games the Sox played at Detroit went 14 innings with the Tigers finally winning on Hank Greenberg's home run of the year.

The White Sox got revenge yesterday with Hank Steinbacher pinch-hitting Mike Kreevich home in the 13th for a 2-1 victory. Kreevich singled four times and scored Chicago's other run to share the glory.

A Bitter Dose

Pittsburgh's seventh consecutive loss in the other extra-chapter story was a bitter dose because the Pirates led most of the way and seemed victory-bound when Gus Suhr hit a home run in the 11th. But Don Padgett singled in a tying run and the usually steady Pep Young fumbled a grounder which let Padgett also score and win 6-5 for the Cardinals.

Chicago Cubs and Cincinnati Reds were headed for a long bout until the Reds burst out with eight runs in their half of the eighth to win 11-3.

Simmons Hit Homer

Boston Bees and Philadelphia Phillies also decided their melee in the eighth as Al Simmons hit for the circuit and Boston's margin in a 5-4 triumph. On the other hand Washington Senators had no trouble subduing Philadelphia Athletics 6-3 on the nine-hit knuckle-ball pitching of Dutch Leonard.

St. Louis Browns eased past Cleveland Indians 4-2 with Johnny Marcum having a shutout until the ninth inning when Jeff Heath, one time Port William, Ont., boy, hit a home run with one on for the Tribe.

Bad weather caused postponement of the games scheduled between New York and Brooklyn in the senior circuit and the Yankees and Boston in the American league.

British Tennis Ace Has Lost Faith In the Stars

Toronto, April 28 (CP)— Bunny Austin has lost faith in the stars.

At a meeting here last night to explain moral re-armament, for which he is crusading in Canada, the slim British tennis ace lost his serious attitude for a while to regale the listeners with the story of his distrust of astrology.

"It was the night before the Wimbledon finals of 1932 when I played Ellsworth Vines of the United States," Bunny began. "A friend called me up and told me I had nothing to worry about. He had been studying the stars and I couldn't lose.

"Well, Ellsworth and I both were pretty bad at the start of the match. But I wasn't worried: the stars had said I would win. Even when Vines improved and took the first set 6-4 I wasn't worried. And I still wasn't worried after he had won the second set 6-2. You see, I had implicit faith in the stars.

"We went into the third set and Vines continued to improve and I continued to be as bad as ever. Not until he had me 5-0 in games and 40-15 in the sixth game did I begin to suspect something was wrong. It was too late then.

"There was a 'ping' and beside me there was a smudge. I undoubtedly was Vines' service. I have never believed in astrology since."

GRADS DEFEATED

Edmonton, April 28 (CP)—Edmonton Grads' hold on the Underwood International Women's Basketball challenge trophy they have held since 1923 was threatened today by St. Louis Legions.

The United States challengers deadlocked the best-of-five series at a game each when they held off a late Edmonton rally here last night to win 28-27. Grads won the first game, 35-24 and they play again tomorrow night.

WEMBLEY PITCH TO BE SCENE OF THE CUP FINAL

Wolverhampton and Portsmouth to Play Before 100,000 Spectators

KING WILL ATTEND

Queen Elizabeth Will Present the Trophy to Winning Team

London, April 28 (CP Cable) — Throughout England thousands of soccer fans are excited over the prospect of a trip to London tomorrow. From all over the country special trains will pour into the Capital with crowds bound for the English Cup final at Wembley stadium.

Survivors of the great annual tournament in which big and little teams—amateur and professional—have competed since last fall, Wolverhampton Wanderers and Portsmouth will meet in the huge bowl before 100,000 spectators.

Soccer's blue-ribbon event will find the two gland-treated squads at full strength but the young Wolves, as they are known, are hot favorites to capture the silverware for the third time in the club's history. The workmanlike Portsmouth eleven are undaunted by the much-advertised strength of the Midlanders and after two defeats in final games since 1929 hope to confound the critics.

Jack Tinn, Portsmouth manager, will wear the famous spats reputed to have brought the team luck in many a hard battle and before the match Albert Burdon, well-known comedian, will keep the players in high spirits in their dressing room with jokes and recitations. Meanwhile the Portsmouth players have been ordered not to discuss football.

The match will mark one of the last public appearances of the King and Queen before they sail for Canada. It is expected the King will shake hands with the footballers before the match and the Queen will present the trophy to the captain of the winning team.

SWIMMING MARKS ARE SHATTERED

Noel Oxenbury Clips One-Fifth Second Over Backstroke Record

Winnipeg, April 28 (CP)—With two Canadian swimming marks already shattered, aquatic stars from east and west compete here tonight in closing events of the Dominion championship gala.

Vancouver's 20-year-old British Empire games ace, Noel Oxenbury, clipped one and one-fifth seconds from the National Senior Women's 100 yards backstroke record last night as the meet opened and Margaret Taggart, Winnipeg, knocked one and four-fifths seconds from the junior girl's 220 yards free style mark.

Jean Stanton, Vancouver, forced Noel Oxenbury to the new back stroke record and was barely a foot behind when Noel finished in one minute, 12 1-5 seconds to better the mark of 1.13 2-5 established by Mary McConkey, Edmonton. Florence Humble, blond Toronto Dolphinet was third.

Margaret Haggart, setting the 220 yards free style junior mark of two minutes, 47 3-5 seconds, defeated another Empire games swimmer, Joan Langdon of Vancouver, with June Emerson, Moose Jaw, Sask., in third place. The record of 2.49 2-5 was held by Margaret Stone, Toronto.

They Play in English Cup Final Tomorrow

Tomorrow the football season in England reaches its climax with the playing of the cup finals, culmination of the annual tournament that found almost every organized team in the country entered and one by one eliminated until the two finalists, Portsmouth and Wolverhampton Wanderers were all that remained. Tomorrow one of them will take the historic trophy. Should Portsmouth win it will be its first cup triumph, although the team has reached the finals twice, losing 2-1 to Manchester City five years ago and 2-0 to Bolton Wanderers in 1929. The Wanderers have been finalists on five previous occasions and twice have been the winners, the last time 31 years ago when they defeated Newcastle United 3-1. Five of the stars who will take part in tomorrow's classic are shown above. On each side are the two pivots, left, Stanley Cullis, centre half with Wolverhampton and right, Bob Salmond, centre half with Portsmouth. Down the centre, from top to bottom, James Beattie, Portsmouth centre forward; William Morris, Wolverhampton right back; and Charlie Phillips, forward with the same team.

NEW THREAT FOR KENTUCKY DERBY HONORS SCORES ANOTHER IMPORTANT WIN

Making rapid strides to the head of the class of Kentucky Derby favorites is Gilded Knight, seen here as he won the $15,000 added Chesapeake Stakes at Havre de Grace. Gilded Knight covered the mile and a sixteenth in 1:45 3-5 to finish a length and a half in front of Impound, the other horse shown in the picture. Impound is one of the Derby eligibles beaten in this race, others being Porter's Mite, Challedon and Volitant. One week previous to this win Gilded Knight had defeated El Chico, winter book Derby favorite and last year's leading two-year-old, at Jamaica. Ruperto Donoso is the jockey piloting the winner home here.

With the advent of warmer weather local golfers, lawn bowlers and tennis addicts are anxiously anticipating the forthcoming season's activities. We understand the greens at the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club wintered exceptionally well and are in the best condition since the game was revived at the Fair Grounds a few years ago. Like the tennis lovers, however, the lawn bowlers will have to wait until the week of the 24th of May to break the ice and commence their long season of outdoor sporting activities. The golfers have been a little more fortunate, however. Both at the Bay of Quinte and Belleville Golf clubs, members have long since been pounding the little white pellet about with gusto. The majority of the golf to date has been played on the high and dry lands, as the valleys and low fairways have been inundated, but in both cases sufficient gardens are available to permit ample pre-season golf. Continued fine weather will assure capacity crowds golfing over the week end, however.

Jimmy Powers of the New York News nifties: "Ray Hayworth, Dodger catcher, is Bill Dickey's double—excepting at bat....The Reds have not won an opening game since they beat the Cubs, 5 to 4, in 1932....Giants' training site may be Havana or Miami next year....An A. L. umpire told me his reason for the success of Newark and Yank hitters. The managers let their batters swing at 'meat ball' pitches. Most managers will flash the 'take' sign when the count is 3 and 1, two and nothing. McCarthy's and Neun's 'take' sign is rusty. The batter is free to swing at that good pitch or let it go."

The Cardinals had Bill Lee, Dizzy Dean, Mace Brown and Jim Winford on their farm club at St. Joseph in the Western League in 1930, which finished a bad last. They won 53 games and lost 92 ....Larry MacPhail's indictment, charging that Van Mungo failed to follow pitching instructions last season, grows out of a high fast one Van pitched to Ernie Lombardi of the Reds when he was signaled to use a low curve. Ernie slapped the high 'un over the escarpment, turning what looked like a Dodger win into a defeat, and sending Burleigh Grimes into a rage.

The annual rush and squabbles for softball players' signatures are being waged by the various Belleville managers. About the only one not too paramountly concerned is "Red" Townsend, at the helm of the local junior squad. The sorrel-topped leader of the teen-aged mushballers has signed Steve Hook former Simcoe and Kitchener speed ball moundsman, who is making the softball populace sit up and take notice. Hook has plenty of the old smoke, they do say. "Give me two hard-hitting pill-pounders in the outfield and we'll make it so interesting for the rest of 'em they'll be glad we're not in the intermediate O.A.S.A. category," predicted Townsend as he eulogized his juniors today. Incidentally the Oilers have changed their training grounds and will work out at Ann Street school grounds commencing this evening.

The possibilities of the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" entering the Bay of Quinte League, along with Belleville, Picton and Napanee, is closer to a reality today than ever before. This week F. O. Davenport, secretary of the R.C.A.F. Sports Club, communicated with Lynn Crossman, secretary of the Quinte League, requesting the Air Force be notified of the time and place of the next league meeting, which will be held early next week. Incidentally we were not at all surprised at the attitude taken by the younger baseball players when they convened at the "Y" Wednesday night. "For these many years passed the old timers have frozen out any promising young talent that appeared pre-season seeking berths on the club, so no wonder the youth of this city has become skeptical regarding trying out for positions on the local ball nine," the younger element bewailed. Frankly speaking we are in acord with the kids, but now that this annual bug-bear has been remedied we expect to see a large delegation of younger players answer the call to practice at the Collegiate grounds Monday evening.

Do you remember when Kid Chocolate, featherweight negro, won his 166th fight, defeating Johnny Crickson of New York in a slow 10-round bout at Toronto nine years ago tonight. The negro was warned several times to fight, but preferred to carry Crickson along for the 10 rounds.

Maybe's it's true that playing on the home grounds helps the batting eyes, but in 43 of the 83 shutouts recorded in the National league last year, the home club was the one getting whitewashed.

There seems to be some misunderstanding between Tommy Farr and Larry Gains regarding the length of their proposed bout on May 17th. Naturally Farr wants the long grind of 15 rounds, Farr always finishing well, if he's perpendicular, Gains feels he can beat Farr over the shorter route of ten rounds. Gains added to his prowess by offering a side bet of £250.

We're telling you that Goody Rosen is considered one of the best hustling ballsters in the majors....Although Connie Mack is 76 years young he still has visions of another powerful Athletic team for Philadelphia and don't be surprised if he produces the same, if spared for the next two or three years After a two-year sojourn in Oshawa, Tommy Foley returned to his native Peterboro and will chase flies for the Petes this summer.....It might be a splendid idea if the East End Club, headed by Bill Dennis, took over the local junior O.B.A. sponsorship; there's a great opportunity there for a public service to the teen-aged kids of the city....Especially after the Kiwanis divorced themselves of such responsibilities.

The sympathy of the sporting fraternity is extended to Garnet (Shiner) Sinfield, well known Belleville hockey and baseball player who mours the loss of his best friend—his mother.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 28—(CP)—Relieved of some of the recent tension with Hitler's speech in the background, stocks registered a moderate advance today on the Toronto exchange with trading more active than usual. All the rise appeared at the opening and the rest of the session was passed in quiet profit-taking that trimmed price by more than half the early gains. Leading indices were still up 1-2 to a point at the close. Close to 600,000 shares changed hands, the heaviest in 10 days or more.

NEW YORK STOCKS

New York, April 28.—(AP)—The stock market quietly slumped today, after a momentary rise in the opening in response to Chancellor Hitler's speech.

Early advances, running to $1 or more in some issues, were lost by midday, and toward the start of the last hour, many leading shares were $1 to $3 under yesterday's closing levels.

Brokers said that while Wall Streeters generally felt the Reichsfuehrer's remarks were somewhat more conciliatory than expected, they did not basically change the situation. After an opening buying rush was over, light selling was enough to tilt the list lower.

Opening dealings, much more active than recently, slowed to a crawl after noon. Transfers were about 900,000 shares.

Eggs Decline 1 Cent at Toronto

Toronto, April 28—Firmer prices were established in butter, but eggs showed losses ranging to 1c a dozen on the Toronto open produce market yesterday, according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The butter market tightened as good demand absorbed offerings. Ontario creamery solids improved to the range of 20 3-4c to 21c for No. 1 grades and 20c to 20 1-4c for 38 score. Receipts moved freely at the lower figure, but buyers showed resistance when holders raised asking prices. As a result the majority of business passed at the 20 3-4 mark for first grade, with the odd sale recorded at the higher price.

With little interest apparent in storing at present price levels, dealers reduced quotations on the egg market to stimulate trading. Demand was quieter. Ungraded eggs declined to 18c for Grade A-large, 15c for B's and 14c for C grades, while the retail section eased 1c per dozen on the top grades only. Graded shipments closed at 20½c to 21c for Grade A-large, 19c for medium, 18½c for pullets and 18c for B and C grades.

Montreal Produce Easier.

Montreal, Apr. 28 (CP)—Butter and egg prices weakened in fairly active trading on open produce markets here today, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold at 21½-22 cents a dozen for A-large, 20 for A-medium, 19 for A-pullets, 19-19½ for B-large and 18 for C. Receipts: 3,004 cases.

NAME SHOULD HAVE BEEN MR. W. HUGHES

In the report of the Chamber of Commerce annual banquet held in the Hotel Quinte last week at which Mr. Denton Massey was the guest speaker, the names of new members accepted into the organization were read by Mr. Lyle Hunter.

Included in this list was the name "W. Bews". This should have read Mr. W. Hughes, instead of the former name.

TEXT OF SPEECH HANDED TO EMBASSY OF U.S. IN BERLIN

Berlin, April 28—(AP)—The text of Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag speech was handed to the United States Embassy today as his official reply to President Roosevelt's peace appeal of April 14.

German officials in London and Warsaw also delivered to the British and Polish governments memoranda notifying them, respectively, of the cancellations of the Anglo-German naval treaty and the German-Polish non-aggression pact.

65 PERSONS KILLED IN RIOTS IN INDIA

Bombay, April 28—(AP)—An estimated 65 persons were killed today in Gangpur, a small native state in Eastern India, when police fired on a mob of rioting natives.

The cause of the rioting could not be ascertained immediately although it was reported the mob was incensed by the arrest of a single Indian.

SPECIFIC ANSWERS

globe, provided the whole world is not systematically drawn into such conflicts by means of a network of nebulous pact obligations.

(III)

Never Resorted to Arms

Mr. Roosevelt declared that he had already appealed to me on a former occasion on behalf of a peaceful settlement of political, economic and social problems and without resort to arms.

The answer: I myself have always been an exponent of this view and, as history proves, have settled necessary political economic and social problems without force of arms, that is, without resort to arms.

(IV)

Mr. Roosevelt believes the tide of events is once more bringing the threat of arms with it, and that if this threat continues a large part of the world is condemned to a common ruin.

The answer: As far as Germany is concerned, I know nothing of this kind of threat to other nations, although I every day read in the democratic newspapers lies about such a threat. Every day I read of German mobilizations, of the landing of troops, of extortions—all this in regard to states with whom we are not only living in deepest peace, but also with whom we are, in many cases, the closest friends.

(V)

Always Exponent of View

Mr. Roosevelt believes further that in case of war victorious, vanquished and neutral nations will all suffer.

The answer: As a politician I have been the exponent of this conviction for 20 years, at a time when unfortunately the responsible statesmen in America could not bring themselves to make the same admission as regards their participation in the Great War and its issue.

(VI)

Mr. Roosevelt believes that it lies with the leaders of the great nations to preserve their peoples from the impending disaster.

The answer: If that is true, then it is a punishable neglect, to use no worse word, if the leaders of nations with corresponding powers are not capable of controlling their newspapers which are agitating for war, and so to save the world from the threatening calamity of an armed conflict. I am not able to understand, further, why these responsible leaders instead of cultivating diplomatic relations between nations, make them more difficult and indeed disturb them by recalling Ambassadors, etcetera, without any reason.

(VII)

Sacrificed in 1919

Mr. Roosevelt declared finally that three nations in Europe and one in Africa have seen their independent existence terminated.

The answer: I do not know which three nations in Europe are meant. Should it be a question of the province re-incorporated in the German Reich I must draw the attention of Mr. Roosevelt to an historical error. It is not now that these nations sacrificed their independent existence in Europe, but rather in 1918 when they, contrary to solemn promises, were separated from their communities and made into nations which they never wished to be and never were.

As for the fact, however, that one nation in Africa is alleged to have lost its freedom—that, too, is but an error. For it is not a question of one nation in Africa having lost its freedom—on the contrary practically all the previous inhabitants of this continent have been made subject to the sovereignty of other nations by bloody force, thereby losing their freedom. Moroccans, Berbers, Arabs, Negroes, etcetera, have all fallen victim to foreign might, the swords of which, however, were inscribed not "made in Germany," but "made by democracies."

(VIII)

Mr. Roosevelt then speaks of the reports which admittedly he does not believe to be correct but which state that further acts of aggression are contemplated against still other independent nations.

The answer: I consider every such unfounded insinuation as an offence against the tranquility, and consequently the peace, of the world. I also see therein something which tends to frighten smaller nations or at least make them nervous.

If Mr. Roosevelt really has any specific instances in mind in this connection I would ask him to name the States which are threatened wit haggression and to name the aggressor in question. It will then be possible to refute these monstrous general accusations by brief statements.

Wants Reason For War

Mr. Roosevelt states that the world is plainly moving toward the moment when this situation must end in catastrophe unless a rational way of guiding events is found.

He also declares that I have repeatedly asserted that I and the German people have no desire for war and that if this is true there need be no war.

The answer: I wish to point out firstly, that I have not conducted any war; secondly, that for years past I have expressed my abhorrence of war and, it is true, also my abhorrence of war mongers, and thirdly that I am not aware for what purpose I should wage a war at all. I should be thankful to Mr. Roosevelt if he would give me some explanation in this connection.

(X)

Mr. Roosevelt is finally of the opinion that the peoples of the earth could not be persuaded that any governing power has any right or need to inflict the consequences of war on its own or any other people save in the cause of self-evident home defence.

The answer: I should think that every reasonable human being is of this opinion, but it seems to me that in almost every war both sides claim a case of unquestionable home defence, and that there is no institution in this world, including the American President himself, which could clear up this problem unequivocally.

(XI)

Assails Versailles Treaty

Mr. Roosevelt says further that he does not speak from selfishness nor fear nor weakness, but with the voice of strength and friendship for mankind.

The answer: If this voice of strength and friendship for mankind had been raised by America at the proper time, and if above all it had possessed some practical values, then at least there could have been prevented that treaty which has become the source of the direst derangement of humanity and history, namely the dictate of Versailles.

(XII)

Mr. Roosevelt declares further that it is clear to him that all international problems can be solved at the council table.

The answer: Theoretically one ought to believe in this possibility, for common sense would correct demands on the one hand and show the compelling necessity of a compromise on the other.

For example, according to all common sense logic, and the general principles of a higher human justice indeed according to the laws of a divine will, all peoples ought to have an equal share of the goods of this world.

It ought not then to happen that one people needs so much living space that it cannot get along with 15 inhabitants to the square kilometre, while others are forced to nourish 140, 150, or even 200 on the same area.

Should Not Curtail Space

But in no case should these fortunate peoples curtail the existing living space of these who are, as it is, suffering, by robbing them of their colonies, for instance. I would therefore be very happy if these problems could really find their solution at the council table.

My skepticism, however, is based on the fact that it was America herself who gave sharpest expression to her mistrust in effectiveness of conferences. For the greatest conference of all time was without any doubt the League of Nations.

That authoritative body representing all the peoples of the world, created in accordance with the will of an American President, was supposed to solve the problems of humanity at the council table.

The first state, however, that shrank from this endeavour was the United States—the reasons being that President Wilson himself even then nourished the greatest doubts of the possibility of really being able to solve decisive international problems at the conference table.

Why He Left League

It was not till after years of purposeless participation that I resolved to follow the example of America and likewise leave the largest conference in the world. Since then I have solved the problems concerning my people which like all others were, unfortunately, not solved at the conference table of the League of Nations—and, too, without recourse to war in any case.

The freedom of North America was not achieved at the conference table any more than the conflict between the north and the south was decided there.

(XIII)

Mr. Roosevelt continues that it is no answer to the plea for peaceful discussion for one side to plead that unless they receive assurances beforehand that the verdict will be theirs not to lay aside their arms.

Says Only Germany Did It

The Answer: Do you believe, Mr. Roosevelt, that when the final fate of nations is in the balance, a government or the leaders of a people will lay down their arms or surrender them before a conference, simply in the blind hope that in their wisdom or if you like, their discernment, the other members of the conference will arrive at the right conclusion?

Mr. Roosevelt, there has been only one country and one government which have acted according to the recipe extolled in such glowing terms, and that country was Germany. The German nation once, trusting in the solemn assurances of President Wilson and in the confirmation of these assurances by the Allies, laid down its arms and thus went unarmed to the conference table.

It is true that as soon as the German nation had laid down its arms it was not even invited to the conference table, but in violation of all assurances, was made to suffer the worst breaking of a word that had ever been known.

"Cruellest Dictated Treaty

Then one day, instead of the greatest confusion known in history being resolved around the conference table, the cruellest dictated treaty in the world brought about a still more fearful confusion.

The German delegates were insulted by the mob, stones were thrown at them, and they were dragged like prisoners, not to the council table of the world, but, before the tribunal of the victors; and there, at the pistol's point, they were forced to undergo the most shameful subjection and plundering that the world had ever known.

I can assure you, Mr. Roosevelt, that I am steadfastly determined to see to it that not only now, but for all futures time, no German shall ever enter a conference defenceless, but that at all time and for ever every German negotiator should and shall have behind him the united strength of the German nation, so help me God.

(XIV)

The President of the United States believes that in conference rooms, as in courts, it was necessary that both sides enter a good faith, assuming that substantial justice will accrue to both.

The Answer: German representatives will never again enter a conference that is for them a tribunal. For who is to be the judge there? At a conference there is no accused and no prosecutor, but two contending parties. And if their own good sense does not bring about a settlement between the two parties, they will never surrender themselves to the verdict of disinterested foreign powers.

(XV)

Mr. Roosevelt believes that the cause of world peace would be greatly advanced if the nations of the world were to give a frank statement relating to the present and future policy of their governments.

The Answer: I have already done this, Mr. Roosevelt, in innumerable public speeches. And in the course of this present meeting of the German Reichstag, I have again—as far as this is possible in the space of two hours—made a statement of this kind.

(XVI)

Mr. Roosevelt believes that, because the United States as one of the nations of the western hemisphere is not involved in the immediate controversies which have arisen in Europe, I should therefore be willing to make such a statement of policy to him, as the head of the nation so far removed from Europe.

The answer: How does Mr. Roosevelt come to expect of the head of the German state above all to make a statement without the other governments being invited to make such a statement of their policy as well?

If, however, President Roosevelt thinks that he is qualified to address such a request to Germany or Italy of all nations because America is so far removed from Europe, we on our side might with the same right address to the President of the American republic the question as to what aims American foreign policy has in view in its turn.

(XVII)

The American President further declares that he would then communicate information received by him concerning the political aims of Germany to other nations now apprehensive as to the course of our policy.

The answer: How has Mr. Roosevelt learned which nations consider themselves threatened by German policy and which do not?

Or is Mr. Roosevelt in a position, in spite of the enormous amount of work which must rest upon him in his own country, to recognize of his own accord all these inner spiritual and mental impressions of other peoples and their governments?

(XVIII)

Finally Mr. Roosevelt asked that assurance be given him that the German armed forces will not attack, and above all not invade, the territory or possessions of the following independent nations. He then names as those coming into question: Finland, Latvia, Estonia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, The Netherlands, Belgium, Great Britain, Ireland, France, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Poland, Hungary, Turkey, Iraq, The Arabias, Syria, Palestine, Egypt and Iran.

The answer: I have first taken the trouble to ascertain from the states mentioned firstly whether they feel themselves threatened, and secondly and above all whether this inquiry by the American President was addressed to us at their suggestion or at any rate with their consent. The reply was in all cases negative, in some instances strongly so.

He (Roosevelt) mentions Ireland and asks for a statement to the effect that Germany will not attack Ireland. Now I have just read a speech delivered by De Valera, the Irish Taoiseach (Prime Minister), in which strangely enough, and contrary to Mr. Roosevelt's opinion, he does not charge Germany with oppressing Ireland, but reproaches England with subjecting Ireland to continuous aggression at her hands.

In the same way the fact has obviously escaped Mr. Roosevelt's notice that Palestine is at present occupied not by German troops but by the English; and that the country is having its liberty restricted by the most brutal resort to force, is being robbed of its independence and is suffering the cruellest maltreatment for the benefit of Jewish interlopers.

The German government is nevertheless prepared to give each of the states named an assurance of the kind desired by Mr. Roosevelt on the condition of absolute reciprocity, provided that the state wishes it and itself addresses to Germany a request for such an assurance together with appropriate proposals. As concerns a number of the states included in Mr. Roosevelt's list, this question can probably be regarded as settled from the very start, since we are already either allied with them of at least united by close ties of friendship.

As for the duration of these agreements, Germany is willing to make terms with each individual state in accordance with the wishes of that state.

(XIX)

The American President then goes on to declare . . . that he regards the discussion of the most effective and immediate manner in which the peoples of the world can obtain relief from the crushing burden of armaments, as the most important factor of all.

Mr. Roosevelt perhaps does not know that this problem in so far as it concerns Germany has already been completely solved on one occasion. Between 1919 and 1923 Germany had already completely disarmed—as was expressly confirmed by the Allied commissions.

Attempts Failed

All attempts to induce the other states to disarm, pursued in negotiations at the conference table over many years, came, as is well known, to nothing. This disarmament would have been but the execution of pledges already given and at the same time just and prudent, I myself, Mr. Roosevelt, have made any number of practical proposals for consultation and tried to bring about a discussion of them in order to make possible a general limitation of armaments to the lowest possible level.

And not until 1934 when the last of my comprehensive proposals — that concerning 300,000 as the maximum size of the army— was ultimately turned down did I give the order for German rearmament which was now to be very thorough.

Nevertheless I do not want to be an obstacle in the way of disarmament discussions at which you, Mr. Roosevelt, intend to be present, I would ask you, however, not to appeal first to me and to Germany but rather to the others. I have a long line of practical experience behind me, and shall remain sceptically inclined until reality has taught me to know better.

(XX)

Mr. Roosevelt gives us his pledge finally that he is prepared to take part in discussions looking towards the most practical manner of opening up avenues of international trade to the end that every nation of the world may be enabled to buy and sell on equal terms in the world's market, as well as to possess assurances of obtaining the raw materials and products of peaceful economic life.

Remove Barriers

The answer: It is my belief, Mr. Roosevelt, that it is not so much a question of discussing these problems theoretically as of removing in practice the barriers which exist in international trade. The worst barries, however lie in the individual states themselves.

It is my belief Mr. Roosevelt that it would be a great service if you with your great influence would remove these barriers genuinely to free world trade, beginning with the United States.

THREE FOR THEFT REMANDED WEEK

Two in Custody and Juvenile Given Over to His Parents

Joseph Hurst, 20, Victor Whitely, 22, and a teen-aged juvenile all appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler K. C. in police court today charged with breaking and entering the warehouse of F. Windsor, situated at 132 Pinnacle St., and stealing there-from a quantity of tea, valued at over $25.00, contrary to section 460 of the Canadian Criminal Code. Hurst was also charged with being found in the possession of stolen goods, to wit a quantity of the tea alleged by police to have been stolen.

Hurst and Whitely both requested a week's enlargement in their cases in order to retain the services of counsel. The juvenile lad was represented by Alan Sprague, local barrister, who informed the court his client would withhold his plea until the other two implicated appeared for preliminary hearing next week.

Whitely was the first to ask for enlargement, stating he desired the counsel of a lawyer, Hurst following with the same request. The lads were arrested yesterday by Sergeant Arthur Harman and Plainclothes Constable Fred Isard and following questioning the police are said to have recovered 36 pounds of the 68 pounds said to have been stolen from Mr. Windsor's warehouse on Pinnacle St. last week.

"One of the trio informed us 32 pounds of the tea had been sold for $10.00," police revealed today. Hurst and Whitely were held in custody, while the juvenile boy was given into the custody of his parents.

POLICE COURT

Immediately upon being released from custody on a charge of the theft of a quantity of metal, when he appeared before Magistrate E. J. Butler K. C. in today's police court, Gordon Asselstine was again placed under arrest by Sergeant H. Thompson, of the Provincial Police. Asselstine was re-arrested on a warrant issued at Grimsby charging him with the theft of grain.

When the accused appeared today on a charge of the theft of metal, the property of Dora Goodman, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K. C. informed the court the Crown's chief witness had disappeared.

"I realize we can't hold this man indefinitely and would suggest the court enlarge the case sine die," added Mr. Donnan, who was acquainted with the fact Provincial Police held a warrant for Asselstine's arrest from Grimsby. "This matter has been pending for a full month and I do not think it fair to my client to have him continually remanded," objected Alan Sprague, local barrister appearing for the accused. His Worship enlarged the matter sine die and released Asselstine from custody. Sergeant Thompson immediately exercised the warrant issued at Grimsby and Asselstine was again in custody.

A charge of the theft of certain automobile accessories, preferred against George McGowan, Stirling, was dismissed by the court upon the payment of the costs assessed against the accused, however. McGowan was charged recently with the theft of automobile accessories, the property of Walter Townsend, of this city.

Jacob Goodman, local lawyer appearing for the accused, made it known, that McGowan had been instructed to remove certain articles from the old Massey Harris premises on Front St. in April of 1937. "There seems to have been some mistake relative to some of the goods removed. They were later restored to Mr. Townsend," Mr. Goodman explained. Crown Attorney Donnan revealed there were no established facts, that the articles in question were actually in the building at the time, which prompted His Worship to dismiss the charge against McGowan.

A Thurlow lad appeared charged with failing to produce his motor operator's licence when requested to by a police officer. The lad produced a new licence, but was fined one dollar and costs for his delinquency.

No More Piles

Get Quick, Pleasant Relief

Probably not one person in ten knows the cause of piles is inside—bad circulation of blood in the lower bowel.

That is the scientific truth about piles and is the real reason why salves and suppositories do not give more than temporary relief—they do not remove the cause.

Your piles can not be relieved until you have corrected the condition which causes them. That is why an internal medicine like HEM-ROID should be used.

HEM-ROID is the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, who early in his professional life made many tests to relieve piles by correcting the cause. His medicine succeeds because it stimulates the circulation, eases the pressure of blood in the veins of the lower bowel and helps to heal and restore the sore, tender parts.

So if you have failed to get the relief you want from your sore, painful piles, and would like to give HEM-ROID a trial, you have our promise to return you money, if just one bottle of this prescription does not give pleasing results. J. S. McKeown or any druggist can supply you with the genuine HEM-ROID.

Zurich Fair To Attract Tourists

Street dancing at Zurich Fair

By TEMPLE MANNING

The United States does not have a monopoly on fairs this year; running concurrently with the local fairs will be the exposition at Zurich, Switzerland. This is called the Swiss National Exposition, opening in May and closing in October.

It is neither by accident nor design that the Swiss are holding their show this year. It seems that every quarter of a century the Swiss have a sort of national inventory, a stocktaking of their resources, their present, their improvements and a preview of the future. And this year happens to be the year for that stock-taking. The site is too large park areas, one on either side of the lake, as beautiful a site as could be devised for any such show.

Beautiful City

Zurich itself is an impressively beautiful city, a busy, bustling one, too. It is a city of delightful contrasts. There are streets that are cobble-stoned and lined with ancient houses; turn up a narrow street and you are likely to find one of the picturesque, old guild houses. However, not far away is the Bahnhoferstrasse, a beautifully kept, tree-lined street, with smart shops, commercial buildings, restaurants and plenty of cafes.

As is the case with so many towns of Continental Europe, Zurich is dominated by its cathedral. The Grossminister has twin Gothic towers surmounted by quaint helmet-shaped tops. One tower has a statue of Charlemagne on a ledge at the side. The smaller churches are very lovely, but it is the Romanesque edifice that is the centre of attraction.

Economic Life

As for the exposition, it will, of course, stress the many phases of the economic life of the country. The hotels of Switzerland, which have supplied many of the world's leading hotel people, have arranged an especially interesting section. It is housed in a house by the lake, an hotel with rooms arranged as they were in the nineties, at the turn of the century, pre and post-war and now. Restaurants, lounges, lecture halls and kitchens in full working order are some of the attractions. A model Swiss village, with its peasant houses, its inns, restaurants and dairy farms with butter and cheese in the making, will be a typical attraction. There also will be sections devoted to fruit and vegetable farming and vineyard industries.

The children's section will be a little paradise, from all accounts. One of the cleverest ideas we have encountered in any exposition is that of a motor workshop where little boys can learn to put a small car together. The parts will be given to them and under supervision, they will put the parts together. And from time to time there will be motor races over a 100-metre course in which these cars will be entered.

DEATHS

The funeral will take place from the family residence, 236 West Moira Street, on Saturday afternoon, April 29th., at 2 o'clock to Holloway Street United Church for, service at 2.30 o'clock.

Vitamins As Factors In Surgery

By Logan Clendening, M.D.

THE BENT of experimental work in surgery of late is not so much to improve operative technique or to invent new operations as it is to safeguard the patient from the general stress of surgical operations.

I recently visited the medical school of a great state university and found that the head of the department of surgery seldom did any routine operations. I found that he was working on the iodine supply in food and water, its relation to goitre and the function of the thyroid gland in order to find out if there might be some way either to safeguard the patient when surgery was indicated or to obviate thyroid surgery entirely.

Along the same line the use of vitamins has been advocated to make surgery less hazardous.

Interferes With Nutrition

All major surgical operations involve some interference with the patient's nutrition. It is frequently necessary to curtail or completely abolish intake of food by mouth for varying periods for surgical patients.

If this disturbance of normal food intake lasts only a few days and, in the meantime, the patient's fluid intake is kept up and his energy requirement is satisfied by the administration of glucose and normal saline, he probably suffers no harm. In many cases, however especially in the case of patients who undergo operations on the stomach and intestines, the patient has been forced to curtail his food intake for weeks, or even months, before coming to the attention of the surgeon.

Here it is possible to see malnutrition severe enough to reduce markedly the chance for brilliant results with surgical treatment.

The vitamins, those substances present in foods which do so much to keep the human machine functioning smoothly, are supplied to all of us who lead normal lives in our normal foods. But in circumstances of partial starvation, such as described above, from long-continued interference with normal digestion, they may be deficient and lead to a number of conditions important for the surgeon to consider.

Causes Hemorrhage

Deficiency of vitamin C may cause serious hemorrhage by increasing the clotting time of the blood. It may also prevent normal wound healing.

Whipple and Elliott have found that many candidates for surgery frequently suffer from prolonged malnutrition and vitamin deficiency. These deficiencies, together with the low serum protein of blood and tissues, may prevent normal healing and unquestionably predispose toward wound disruption.

With these and other facts along the same line, several surgeons (see Vorhaus, American Journal of Surgery, 1938) have advocated that intensive vitamin and mineral administration be given surgery patients for several days before an operation. Five to ten days of such administration will suffice in most cases to correct existing difficulties. Thus surgery calls in dietetic science in order to increase its own efficiency.

Current Offerings at Belleville Theatres

AT THE McCARTHY

"PAINTED DESERT"

Filmed against the famed Arizona desert, and bringing to the screen some of the most exciting scenes ever caught by a camera, "Painted Desert", is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, with George O'Brien in the stellar role.

The plot, colored with the atmosphere of the Western frontier, deals with the adventures of O'Brien, an Arizona rancher, in his endeavors to take over and operate an immensely valuable tungsten mine. After going into partnership with his first opponent, a girl who believes herself the real owner of the property, O'Brien finds himself pitted against an unscrupulous mining promoter who once had his hands on the mine and lost it, and who is determined to get it back—at any cost!

This conflict motivates the story in lively fashion. The promoter gets hold of O'Brien's notes, on which he borrowed the necessary funds for enlarging the mine, and puts on financial pressure. When this fails, sterner measures are tried. O'Brien's cattle herds are driven off; the wagon train carrying the precious ore concentrates to the railroad is stampeded and the wagon forced over a precipice; labor troubles are fomented at the mine, and finally the promoter makes a daring attempt to dynamite the mine itself.

These actions make for dramatically powerful scenes, and they result in putting "Painted Desert" on any adventure-lover's "must see" list. O'Brien's own performance is forceful and realistic, and lovely Laraine Johnson makes a charming heroine. Ray Whitley, Stanley Fields and Fred Kohler head the notable RKO Radio supporting cast with fine portrayals. The direction of David Howard and the production values of Bert Gilroy combine to excellent effect.

"Law of the Underworld"

The companion feature presentation, also now showing at the McCarthy Theatre brings a return to the screen of popular Chester Morris in his most outstanding role to date, that of a gangster chieftain, who leads a double life, as a society idler; and also in turn the "brains" of a ruthless gang. This production "Law of the Underworld" also includes Anne Shirley. Lee Patrick, Eduardo Ciannelli and Walter Abel in excellent supporting roles and is a story of adventure, peril and romance that all combine to make up 70 minutes of the most exciting entertainment reaching the screen this season. In addition to the two features, also a Walt Disney technicolor cartoon "Pluto's Quintuplets" and another thrill-packed chapter of "Flying G-Men" is certain to be enjoyed by all.

AT THE BELLE

"YOU CAN'T CHEAT AN HONEST MAN"

War is raging in Hollywood!

And it is no sham battle fought with blank cartridges and dulled swords for the benefit of movie cameras.

This is a fight to the finish, with W. C. Fields and Charlie McCarthy as the combattants. They started quibbling the day both reported to the Universal studio to start work on "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man," which opens next at the Belle Theatre. Before a week had elapsed, their quibbling had grown into a quarrel. At the end of a month an honest-to-gosh battle was being waged. And by the time the picture was finished it was WAR-a war that hasn't subsided yet.

Who started the fireworks is one of those things which probably will forever remain a mystery. Each blames the other, and in no uncertain terms.

"That fugitive from a picket fence is just asking to be made into a venetian blind," Fields bellows. "Why, he can't open his mouth without an insult leaping out."

Snappy Come-Back

"So Mr. Fields has been talking through that redwood nose again," McCarthy retaliates. "Well, the old grouch bag had better watch his step or I'll mow him down, so help me I will!"

Charlie also retaliated by slipping Fields a broken down dummy for one of his acts, robbing his cash drawer, and exposing him to a sheriff. Then he jumped from a balloon and landed on Fields' head. It was a dull day on the set when something didn't happen to one or the other of them.

In addition to Fields, Bergen and McCarthy, the cast of "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man" includes Mortimer Snerd, Constance Moore, Mary Forbes, Thurston Hall, Princess Baba, John Arledge, Charles Coleman, Edward Brophy, Arthur Hohl, Blacaman and Eddie Anderson.

"Music and models," is the title of multiple-reel musical comedy to be presented on the same program with the Belle latest world news events, and a clever comicolor cartoon "Society Dog Show."

Two Grand Features

Laughs and thrills abound in the two feature program now being presented at the Belle.

Bob Burns and Gladys George are featured in the uproarious feature comedy "I'm From Missouri". William Henry and Judith Barrett suppling the romantic interest.

George Sanders and Wendy Barrie are featured in the romantic mystery drama "The Saint Strikes Back."

A Place to Call Home

By BEULAH ROSE

"Miss Windsor, my figures are done. May I go home now?"

A pair of wistful brown eyes looked out from under a frame of long, dark lashes. Save for this one redeeming feature, the face was plain and pale, and, one might think, almost homely. But to her teacher's heart this little pupil was very dear, and what to others was a plain, pale face was in her eyes an attractive one.

"You're all done, Elsa?" She looked up from her mass of corrected examination papers to the appealing countenance.

"Yes, Miss Windsor, I would like to go now."

"You may, dear."

But instead of scampering off the platform and out of the room, Elsa lingered.

"Miss Windsor—"

"Yes?" Miss Windsor smiled as she questioned. In fact, she always smiled. A sort of half-sad, half-pleading smile, it seemed.

"Why do you always stay so late every night? The other teachers leave much earlier. They all seem so glad that the day is done and they can go home."

Miss Windsor's smile did not fade. But there was a suggestion of tears in the lovely gray eyes.

"No," was the soft reply. "I am not glad that the day is done and I can go home—because"—and here her voice broke—"because you see, dear—I have no home."

Phyllis Windsor's childhood ambition had been to sudy nursing. Somehow, however, her plans had been upset by a queer turn of fate and before she could understand how she got there, she found herself before a class of youthful, voluble scholars.

Now, at the age of 26, she regretted that she had not at the beginning given up her plans for teaching and entered a hospital to study the care of the sick and needy.

The more she thought about it, the greater grew her inclination to abandon the school field and prepare herself for the nursing career that beckoned. Finally the impulse became too compelling, and she deserted the profession to which she had clung for the past four years.

The lapse of two and a half years found Phyllis Windsor looking forward to her graduation day.

"When are you getting through, Miss Windsor?"

He was fairly tall, kind-faced young man in immaculate white. Of late he had begun to appear on the scene whenever Miss Windsor was at leisure, and he seemed not a little interested in her.

"When am I getting through? In seven weeks, exactly," she replied, and a little tremor in her voice was instantly detected by him.

"Then you'll go home for a long vacation, I suppose?" he suggested.

"Home—for a vacation—" Her lips quivered visibly, and her face blanched. "I—I never go home for a vacation."

His glance searched the gray eyes.

"Because," she finished sadly, "I have no home to go to."

He gasped. Looking about him hastily to assure himself that the ward nurse was safely in the kitchen, he leaned toward her and said, in a low voice:

"I shall be through here a few days after you. "Phyllis—I mean, Miss Windsor—mother would be glad to have you home with us. She's so motherly to everybody. And to you—why, I am sure she would just love you."

Her eyes were wet when she looked up at him, but on her lips was a smile.

"Oh, Dr. Shelley—"

"Call me Fred," he said, simply.

"Oh—oh, Fred—I think it is all a dream! To have a place to call home—it is too wonderful!"

He took her hand and gave it a friendly squeeze.

"You would make a wonderful wife and mother," he said, fondly. "All the kiddies here are crazy about you."

It was a long time before the eyes of Phyllis Windsor closed in slumber that night. She tossed on her bed and pinched herself many times. To her roommate she whispered:

"Sally, are you asleep?"

"No; what is it?" queried a drowsy voice.

"Oh Sally, I am going to marry Fred Shelley!"

"Uh-huh—" the sleepy voice was scarcely audible.

"And I—oh, Sally dear, I'm going home!"

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating supper, being liver and onions in pop's honor, and ma said, We had a dress rehearsal of the play this afternoon, Willyum, and it was a personal triumph for me. Imagine it for yourself, Willyum, only 2 words to speak and a personal triumph, she said.

You mean you had an audience there? pop said, and ma said, An audience of one, to be exact, but numbers aside, you couldn't imagine a more important audience, it was Oscar Peebles the dramatic critic of the Evening Speaker. He and Hannah Mabel Papst the authoress and directer are personal friends, so he came to the dress rehearsal, and afterwards he addressed a few remarks to each member of the cast, and I was the only one he actually praised without equivocation, ma said.

Yee gods what did he say? pop said, and ma said, Well, first he was introduced to Blanche Hipple, who has the leading roll I dont know why, and he looked her straight in the eye with that mocking look of his, you know what a reputation he has for ironic sarcasm in his articles, and said, You were remarkable, Mrs. Hipple. Well now that could be taken several ways, good bad and indifferent, you know that, Willyum, and then he met Irene Stoker and he gave her that same look and said, Ah yes, Mrs. Stoker, you played the part of Lady Stoker, you were Lady Burley to the life, Mrs. Stoker.

Was that a dig too? pop said, and ma said, But of course, because Lady Burley is suppose to be in an inefficient puttering nobody, and then Mrs. Papst introduced me with some catty remark about my 2 words, and I had my triumph.

What did he say for Peet sake? pop said, and ma said, His actions spoke louder than volumes, he merely bowed without a sound. I mean it was obvious that he didn't want to hurt the others' feelings by unflattering comparisons.

And she started to do the bridge problem looking like somebody feeling better instead of worse, and pop got in back of the sporting page looking as if he didn't know how to feel.

"Should a Woman marry a man who does not smoke?"

Robert Louis Stevenson said, "No woman should marry a man who does not smoke. Whatever keeps a man in his front garden, whatever checks wandering fancy and all inordinate ambition, whatever makes for lounging and content, makes just as surely for domestic happiness."

And Sam Slick came out flat-footed, "It (a pipe) has made more good men, good husbands, kind masters, indulgent fathers and honest fellers, than any other blessed thing on this universal world". Lord Lytton adds, "He who doth not smoke hath either known no great griefs, or refuseth himself the softest consolation next to that which comes from heaven."

So we in the tobacco business are proud to make and sell a product which contributes so much to human happiness — and to play our part in an industry which has become a vital unit in the commercial and industrial economy of the Dominion.

'GOODY' ROSEN, CANUCK PLAYER IS MAKING GOOD

A REAL HUSTLER

Since Opening of Season Outfielder is Hitting at .333 Pace

(By Alan Randal Canadian Press Staff Writer).

Brooklyn, N.Y., April 28 (CP)—He's just a little fellow, this Goodwin (Goody) Rosen of Toronto but if Brooklyn Dodgers have a better man, pound for pound, you've got to show Manager Lippy Leo Durocher and a flock of Flatbush fans.

They think the little Canadian is about tops in the outfield and at bat and statistics back them up Way back in the spring training grind Durocher didn't think he'd be able to start Rosen. He said Tuck Stainback would take his place. Goody vowed Durocher would eat those words. And apparently he has, for Rosen appears to be a fixture—one of the brightest—in the lineup of the Flatbush follies.

In fact, if every Dodger hustled the way the former bat boy for Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League has been doing, the Dodgers would show more than two victories today. Give or take a pound Rosen is the lightest Dodger coming in at 137. Yet in six of Brooklyn's seven contests — Stainback being used in one game —Goody, as lead-off hitter, managed a hit in each game for a batting average of .333, reaching base 13 times.

First time out, and first Dodger batsman of the season, Goody whammed out a triple. Since then he produced seven singles along with drawing four walks and getting on base once via the error route.

Goody has been in training camp a week after Stainback had taken his place, when he was inserted in the lineup. He celebrated the occasion with a homer the day before Easter and he's been in centre field and leading off in the batting order almost ever since.

Windsor Alumni Even Series With Vancouver Dominoes

Victoria, April 28 (CP)—There'll be a new Canadian Men's Senior Basketball championship team crowned at The Willows gym tonight, but you can't get any odds on the series that appeared at the start destined to be a Victoria dominated final.

Windsor Alumni saw to that in one of the greatest comebacks ever staged in a Dominion final here. They cut into the odds Victoria Dominoes forced up winning the first two games, by downing the British Columbians in the third game Tuesday night and they completed the evening process last night with a breath-taking 27-25 decision over the far westerners. Fifth and final game will be played tonight

Last night's victory was all the more convincing because Alumni fought off Victoria while two Windsor stars were absent with injuries and three others went to the sidelines through personal fouls in the second half.

First Tom Pendlebury, then Geo. Weese and Glen Sherman trotted from the floor on fouls to join Red Nantais, Pendlebury's running mate on guard and out of the game from a pulled ankle ligament suffered in Windsor's 30-24 Tuesday victory. Captain Red Wiseman was lost to the team when he suffered a broken arm in the estern final.

JERSEY GIANTS HEADING LOOP

(By The Associated Press)

It's been a long time since Jersey City had an International League pennant winner—36 years—so the unaccustomed sight of their team in first place may cause Jersey City fans to jump for joy even though the season is only a week old.

The Little Giants accomplished victory yesterday. They moved to the first place feat when they blasted Montreal Royals for a 14-0 victory yesterday. They moved the top and sent Montreal to second place.

Bill Harris blanked the Royals with four singles for his second victory. Al Glossop and Tom Hafey each smacked a home run. Glossop drove in seven counters.

In the only other game played yesterday, Newark Bears nosed out Toronto 4-3 on a home run by their rookie first baseman, Ed Levy. This brought Newark's record to three won and four lost—but it couldn't change the standing as the Buffalo-Baltimore and Rochester-Syracuse games were rained out.

SNAKE GETS FED DESPITE OBJECTIONS

Stern measures—to say nothing of strong and willing hands—are required when it becomes necessary to feed a snake that has gone on a hunger strike. Strangler is a South American anaconda. Strangler arrived at the Philadelphia zoo last August. Strangler went on a hunger strike. Snakes didn't have to have food very often but there was a limit. So when Curator Edmund Mainate decided that Strangler must eat and the temperamental twister refused all offers of tasty chickens, ducks, rabbits and guinea pigs, force was called into play. The scene ABOVE ensued. The curator holds Strangler's head, members of his staff string back as far as his other end (too far to show) and a couple of keepers force a mashed mixture down the reptilian throat. Cute, eh?

Russian Flier Injured When Forced Down in N. B.

Plane is Too Badly Damaged to be Repaired on the Spot Says First Rescuer to Reach Ship

Moncton, N. B., April 29—(CP)—A plane chartered by the Amtorg Corporation and carrying three Russians with passports for the airmen forced down at Miscou Island arrived here this morning from New York. The big plane would be unable to land at the island, and efforts were being made to obtain a lighter craft in an attempt to bring the grounded fliers to the mainland.

Observers in a Canadian Airways plane reported they were unable to land on Miscou Island. The plane returned here after flying low over the island.

They reported seeing the two fliers near the plane. One stood with his hands in his pockets gazing up at the circling craft. The other was sitting on a life raft, his head in his hands. A number of people were gathered around the wrecked ship, while a car was parked a mile away.

Relief Pilot Lands

The observers in the Moncton plane reported that Joseph Anderson, a Canadian Airways relief pilot, had landed on Miscou Island in a small plane.

Anderson, they said, had touched his wheels in one spot and zoomed upwards when he felt the ground sinking under them. He had brought his ship down about a mile from the Russian plane.

The observers in the Canadian Airways plane reported the Russian craft had apparently slewed around when it landed so its nose was pointed sewards. Both propellors were bent but there was no apparent damage to wings and fuselage.

Ice was noted all around the island. Pilot Harold Jones who flew the Canadian airways plane said he believed the car seen on the island belonged there.

Miscou Island, N.B., April 29 — (CP) — Brigadier-General Vladimir Kokkinaki, pilot of the Russian plane which crashed here in an attempted non-stop flight from Moscow to New York, was injured when the ship was forced down, it was learned today.

Lawrence Vibert, a fish-buyer and merchant here, said this morning he had returned from a trip to the badly-wrecked monoplane five miles from his residence. Vibert said that the navigator, Major Mikhail Gordienko, had escaped injury.

Vibert said identification of the injured man was made by the pilot pointing out his name in a newspaper clipping about the flight. Neither Kokkinaki nor Gordienko are able to speak or understand English.

Vibert said that the pilot apparently had suffered several broken ribs but had "rested comfortably" last night on an improvised bed beside the plane.

STUDENTS DISAPPOINTED AT "MOUNTIES" IN MUFTI

Sarnia, Ont., April 29 (CP)—Fifty public school pupils from across-the-river Port Huron, Mich., were disappointed when they visited here yesterday in the hope of seeing Royal Canadian mounted police walking about in their scarlet tunics and other uniform equipment. The two "Mounties" stationed here, in mufti, told the students many duties of the force were not performed in uniform.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Thunderbolts! Long ago it was believed that when lightning flashed there passed along its path a something solid—a thunderbolt, it was called, which buried itself in the ground by force of impact. This belief was not entirely built up by the imagination, but was suggested by two things—First, by lightning striking the ground and leaving a hole the sides of which were glassy due to the melting of the sand; and second, the finding of meteors buried in the earth. Both caused the linking together of meteors and lightning and gave rise to the belief that lightning was accompanied by some solid substance.

Manslaughter Verdict Returned by Jury

Morrison, Ill., Apr. 29 (AP) — A Circuit Court Jury returned a manslaughter verdict today in the case of Dr. Lyle Dingman, 32, Prophetstown veterinarian charged with murdering his wife, Laura, formerly of London, Ont.

Judge Francis Coyle indicated sentence—one to fourteen years—would be imposed next week.

The state charged that Mrs. Dingman, 28, either was pushed from a window of her home or fell while trying to escape from her husband. On the witness stand Dingman denied knowledge of her death, testifying he was unaware of it until he found her body on the lawn the morning of March 19.

Warsaw, April 29 (AP)—Poland, faced with German demands on Danzig and the Polish Corridor, took extra military precautions on her frontiers today and warned Chancellor Hitler that his Reichstag speech had only "stiffened" Polish resistance.

The Polish press, a few hours after political editors had been summoned to the foreign office for a conference, unleashed a bitter attack on Hitler, declaring his denunciation yesterday of the German-Polish non-aggression pact and his new demands had "completely

FIRE DESTROYS CROFTON HOME

Contents of House Occupied by Lorne Munroe Saved

Crofton, April 29 —(Special)— Fire completely destroyed Mr. Blake Jones' tenant house, better known as the Benanuel Salisbury house at about nine o'clock Friday morning. School children on their way to school noticed the fire which had caught in the roof and warned Mr. Lorne Munroe, who was at present living in the house. An alarm was raised and although the house could not be saved, most of the contents were safely removed.

The house was a frame structure and with a high east wind blowing took only about an hour and a half to burn down. Mr. Munroe said the chimney had burned out earlier in the morning but he had completely extinguished it before leaving it to do his chores. However a spark must have alighted on the roof and it being of shingles, the high wind soon fanned it into a blaze.

LIBERAL MEMBER PROTESTS WHEAT PRICE OF 60 CENTS

BUDGET CRITICIZED

Ottawa, April 29—(CP)—The government was given its first public warning from its own ranks in the House of Commons last night that the proposed guarantee of a 60-cent initial wheat price was not good enough.

Fred Johnston, veteran Liberal member from Lake Centre, Sask., stated simply that "under existing conditions our people cannot get along with a 60-cent initial price."

He injected the controversial wheat question, which has yet to be threshed out in the House, into the first day's debate on Finance Minister Dunning's budget.

With regard to the acreage bonus, also proposed, Mr. Johnston said he was "all for it because in its working out it will give assistance to those who most need it."

The fixed price last year did not operate fairly or give assistance according to need.

The cost of products the western farmer had to buy was so high in relation to wheat prices that a 60-cent price would not work. The purchasing power of a bushel of wheat was now only 45 against 100 before the war.

"I believe that a lower price than 80 cents along with the acreage bonus will work out satisfactorily," said Mr. Johnston. "Of course if this House would agree I would not object to an 80-cent price but I do not think that is possible."

"Why not," asked Dr. Harry Fleming (Lib. Humboldt).

Roosevelt May Reply To Chancellor Hitler In 'Fireside Chat'

Washington, April 29—(AP)—President Roosevelt may reply to Chancellor Hitler in a "fireside chat" over the radio, it was said in usually informed congressional circles today.

Responding yesterday to Mr. Roosevelt's recent plea that Germany and Italy promise not to invade or attack 31 independent nations for at least 10 years, the German Chancellor offered peace pledges to these states— provided they asked for them and accompanied their requests with proposals he considered suitable.

One influential administration supporter in congress cited the fact the Fuehrer's response to the United States President was delivered before the German Reichstag and broadcast over the world. Mr. Roosevelt, he said, was likely to reply in kind—by radio.

There was little expectation of an immediate statement by the President. White House aides said the speech which Mr. Roosevelt would deliver Sunday afternoon, opening the New York World's Fair, was written before Hitler began his address.

Someone thought he heard the President mention the Chancellor, and say "the door was left open an inch," while talking with royal visitors yesterday at Hyde Park, N.Y., but there was no clarification of the meaning of this reported remark.

WOLFE ISLANDERS WILL GET HYDRO

Forty - Nine Miles of New Lines for Kingston District

Kingston, Ont., April 29.—(CP)—C. S. Montgomery, District Superintendent for the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, said today 49 miles of new Hydro lines will be constructed this year in the Kingston rural district.

Rural residents of Wolfe Island where Lake Ontario drains into the St. Lawrence, will get Hydro lines for the first time. A cable was extended three miles across the river last year linking the island and the mainland and bringing power to the villagers.

PORTSMOUTH WINS OVER WANDERERS IN CUP FINAL

Pompey Team Wins Highest Honors in English Soccer on Third Attempt

KING, QUEEN PRESENT

London, April 29.—(CP Cable) — Outclassing the famous Wolverhampton Wanderers, before the King and Queen and 100,000 spectators, at Wembley Stadium today Portsmouth triumphed 4-1 to capture the English Cup for the first time in the Club's history. On top throughout, the Southerners led 2-0 at half time.

The two gland-treated teams waged a thrilling battle but after the first ten minutes of play Portsmouth's well-balanced eleven assumed distinct superiority over Major Frank Buckley's youngsters who entered the final heavy favorites.

Pompey, as the Portsmouth team is known in the football world, won the trophy at its third attempt. Back in 1929 the South Coast team were beaten in the final of that year and fell again in 1934. It was the sixth final for the Wolves, successful in 1893 and 1908.

Score in 32 Minutes

Thirty-two minutes had elapsed when R. Barlow, a former Wolverhampton player, put the victors one up when he snapped up a pass to score with a shot from the penalty area. The second goal went to the credit of J. Anderson, centre forward on the point of halftime.

Mobilization of Irish Nation Urged to Combat Conscription

Belfast, Northern Ireland, April 29—(CP)—A manifesto urging "mobilization of the Irish nation" to combat conscription was sent today to Eamon de Valera, Prime Minister of Eire.

The statement, agreed upon at a meeting last night of a group headed by Patrick Maxwell, member of the Northern Ireland parliament and anti-partition leader said it was assumed that the "grave events" cited by Mr. De Valera as the reason for cancellation of his trip to the United States involved "the threatened conscription by England of Irish Nationals in Britain and northern Ireland."

"We believe," it continued, "that in this crisis some definite and decisive step should be taken by you at once as the acknowledged leader of the Irish race."

The manifesto denied a statement of Viscount Craigavon, Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, that the people of Northern Ireland desire to be included in the Conscription Act.

International Tension Little Relieved By Hitler's Speech Papers State

London, April 29.—(CP) —Morning newspapers today agreed that Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag address did little or nothing to relieve International tension.

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) said

"The subject on which the harassed world had chiefly hoped for enlightenment was the real intentions of the Fuehrer, but on that the speech was wholly silent.

"All it did was to confirm a suspicion that his mind continues to seethe with bitter discontent. Herr Hitler gave us only the smallest inkling as to the nature of these still outstanding grievances but the tone of mockery, alike in the modulation of his voice and in the substance of his remarks, left no doubt that for all his immense gains he is as far as ever from being appeased."

The Manchester Guardian —(Liberal)—

"Hitler says that he is accused of threatening war but that he has obtained his successes, immense successes, without war. It is true, but it is also true that his methods, sudden overwhelming application of force, have at last brought him to the point where he himself unites those who rightly or wrongly fear lest they be his victims."

The Daily Herald (Labor) said that any impression that the Fueh-

PRESSING EFFORTS

Eager to Conclude Anglo-Russian Talks Immediately

SPEECH IS STUDIED

No Official Comment Forthcoming but British Press Adopts Cautious Attitude on Hitler's Remarks

London, April 29—(CP) — Great Britain accelerated her efforts to bring Russia into the Anglo-French eastern front today after completing an official study of Chancellor Hitler's speech.

Viscount Halifax, Foreign Minister, summoned the Soviet Ambassador, Ivan Maisky, just back from consultations in Moscow to the foreign office this morning and was reliably reported to have told him Britain was eager to conclude the Anglo-Russian talks as soon as possible.

At the same time the foreign office instructed the British Broadcasting Corporation to broadcast in German that Britain holds pacific intentions toward Germany and to stress that her alliances definitely were not an attempt at "encirclement" of the Reich.

Seeking Definition

It was reported also that Sir Nevile Henderson, Ambassador in Berlin, had been instructed to try again for an interview with the German Foreign Minister—"too busy" before Hitler's speech earlier this week to receive him—to seek a clearer definition of the Fuehrer's statements on Poland, colonies, armaments and the Hitler-denounced Anglo-German naval treaty.

As the discussions with Maisky were renewed the status of the proposed British-Soviet-French entente was as follows:

Russia had offered a complete military alliance to Britain and France, containing specific commitments to guard against aggression not only in Europe but also in the Far East. The Russian view was that the alliance should be the basis of a widespread "new League of Nations," members of which would be bound to help each other in case of aggression.

Basis For Discussion

Britain, while accepting this proposal as a "basis for discussion" was reported to have pointed out that such a system necessarily would take a long time to form and presented some almost insurmountable obstacles. As an example British spokesmen said Poland and Rumania under the Russian system would be forced in certain circumstances to fight for Russia—obligations they would not be likely to accept because of their traditional policies.

Britain, consequently, countered the Russian proposal with a suggestion that Russia declare herself willing to help Britain, France and their allies "if, as and when those allies request help."

Points For Clarification

The points on which it was reported the Ambassador to Berlin would seek clarification of Hitler's speech were:

1. Germany's intentions toward Poland. The Fuehrer's words yesterday were taken by some observers as a threat against Germany's eastern neighbor — with whom Great Britain and France have a military assistance pledge—and therefore a direct menace to the peace of Europe.

2. His reference to return of one-time German colonies. Hitler said "the only claim I have ever made and shall continue to make on England is for the return of our colonies."

Set Your Clock Ahead One Hour Tonight

The annual clock-moving business, inaugurating daylight saving, must be performed tonight in Belleville prior to the retirement of the family. Failure to advance the family's clocks tonight may result in the forgetful residents finding themselves one hour behind on Sunday morning.

Officially daylight saving will not come into effect until 1.00 a.m. Sunday morning, but it has been suggested by city officials that householders do not forget to advance their time-pieces before retiring tonight, or else one may find, themselves late for church service on Sunday morning.

It is not suggested that householders adhere strictly to the time set at 1.00 a.m. and thereby break their peaceful slumbers in the matters of setting forward their time-pieces. The most convenient time, it has been found in years past is upon retiring—so advance all time-pieces one hour tonight and avoid possible embarrassment on Sunday. Daylight saving goes into effect as the result of a proclamation of his Worship Mayor Bone, following a favorable decision of the city council recently.

CHURCHES ON FAST TIME

All church services in the city will be held on Daylight Saving Time beginning tomorrow.

HOSPITAL CLERK BANDIT VICTIM

Toronto, April 29—(CP)— Norris Gee, clerk at the Christie Street Hospital, was held up and robbed of the hospital's pay-roll of $1,384 today by a fair-haired bandit of about 20.

Hatless and wearing a wind-breaker jacket, the bandit fled on foot. Police cruisers scoured the northwest district of the city without immediate success.

Gee said the money, in a black bag, was snatched from his hand near the hospital. He had obtained it, in cash, from a bank. The money was the property of the Department of Pensions and National Health, which operates the hospital, and was wrapped in envelopes designated O.H.M.S.—On His Majesty's Service.

SHORTAGE OF COAL FORCES SHUT-DOWN OF PT. ANNE PLANT

Reportedly due to the fact that the soft coal supply of the plant has been depleted, and the difficulty of securing further orders owing to the soft coal strike in the United States at present Canada Cement Company at Point Anne ceased operations last evening. Today, except for the kiln department, all employees had been affected by the order of temporary shutdown. Work will be resumed, it is expected, when further supplies of the coal are received.

FLOODED STREAMS DETER FISHERMEN

Today signalled the season's opening for trout fishing, but a canvass of local sportsmen this morning revealed that not many anglers had journeyed to the swollen streams of the northern townships of the county, or in Northumberland, where fishing in past years has been admittedly better. Flooded condition of the streams and adjacent land at present has put a damper on this sport, it was stated by a veteran fisherman today.

City to Start Tree Planting Next Week

First Start Will be Made on Zwick's Island

First start on what is expected to be the planting of 20,000 trees of different varieties in the vacant areas and lots within the city will be undertaken next week, it was announced by Mayor Bone this morning.

This week, Mr. R. S. Carman, expert of the Ontario Forestry Department visited Belleville and completed arrangements for the shipment of the free trees to Belleville with city engineer Chas. Mott and the Mayor.

First start will be made on Zwick's Island. It is hoped and from there the planting will be carried out on other waste areas which have been plotted in the report submitted some time ago by the city engineer.

Cost of the planting to the city will be almost negligible, it was stated by the Mayor. It will be even cheaper than the expected cost of three cents for the setting of each tree. Trees are being provided free of charge by the department, and all work this summer is expected to be carried out by relief workers.

"Any cost connected with it will be the cost of cheap fencing", stated the Mayor, determined to give the new trees every protection, even if it means the special patrolling of city police.

"It would be a good idea of teachers and principals of the various schools to inaugurate special lessons in horticulture and of trees in particular. I wonder how many of our children really know one tree from another"? pondered the Mayor.

"We want all the help we can get on this matter of tree planting. I, for one, would like to see about one thousand acres in and out of Belleville completely covered with new trees which will be of untold benefit to present and future generations."

Will Make Attempt To Rid Stoco Lake Of Nuisance Fish

In an effort to solve the problem of preserving game fish fry by ridding Stoco Lake of scavenging bill-fish through the medium of placing steel nets at the rivermouth, government supervisors will likely arrive in Tweed in the near future with this object in view.

Great inroads have been made on the fry placed in the lake by the Tweed Fish and Game Club during the past few years by these scavengers, and it is believed that nets placed at various points in the lake during the spawning season will assist materially in ridding the waters of these enemies of game fish.

Arrangements for the placing of the nets by government authorities were completed some time ago by Reeve Kerr and Dr. W. Paul, president of the Game and Fish Club.

Banquet Launches Campaign To Raise $1,200 for Red Cross

Howard J. Clarke, Campaign Chairman, Presides at Meeting

DR. ROUTLEY HEARD

Belleville branch of the Red Cross Society made final preparations last evening for the launching of the annual campaign for funds which begins in the city on May 1st with an objective of $1,200. Officers and canvassers conferred at a dinner meeting held in St. Thomas Parish House at which were present Dr. F. Routley, director of the Ontario division of the Canadian Red Cross and Mr. H. C. H. Miller, field secretary.

Mr. Howard J. Clarke, campaign chairman, presided at the banquet and in addition to prominent business and professional men of the city, who have generously proffered their services to assist in the campaign, the following ladies were named to take part in the work of the campaign under the direction of the vice president, Mrs. S. Lazier and the secretary, Mrs. E. A. Geen; Mrs. A. B. Collins, Miss Ida Thompson, Mrs. A. D. Archibald, Mrs. L. M. Hoye, Mrs. Wm. Pepper, Mrs. C. A. Cameron, Mrs. W. C. Morgan, Miss Jessie McGie, Mrs. F. Chamberlain, Mrs. T. Crozier, Mrs. C. G. Heard, Mrs. H. L. Hunter, Mrs. H. Newby, Mrs. J. W. Kinnear, Mrs. Harry Smith, Mrs. C. E. Argue, Miss Ruth Thompson, Mrs. J. Arbuckle, Mrs. H. W. Ackerman, Miss S. Davison, Mrs. A. H. Ketcheson, Mrs. J. O'Flynn, Mrs. F. Wallbridge, Mrs. J. W. Holmes, Mrs. E. R. Logie, Mrs. H. L. Alford, Mrs. H. O. Trusdale, Mrs. R. B. Morden, Mrs. R. H. Wray, Mrs. W. J. Harrison, Mrs. J. E. Bateman, Mrs. C. N. Waters, Mrs. N. C. Wilbur, Mrs. O. Pinkston, Mrs. E. Fairman, Mrs. J. E. Lang, Mrs. E. M. Bassingthwaighte Mrs. S. Hibbard, Mrs. A. E. Purdy, Mrs. R. Abram, Mrs. P. Lazier.

Lively Sing Song

During the banquet a lively sing song was led Mr. F. R. Wotten who presided at the piano. The chairman expressed thanks to all who had promised their cooperation in the annual campaign and called upon the branch president, Mr. I. G. Hefkey, who expressed his appreciation to officers and members for their fine organization work and introduced to the gathering Dr. F. Routley, director of the Ontario division. Dr. Routley referred to the fine record one member of the Belleville Red Cross had in the work of the Society, Miss Anna Hurley, who had been identified with the local branch since war days and had given much of her time as secretary treasurer for many years.

Discussing in an interesting manner, many aspects of this great humanitarian service, as one closely identified with all phases of Red Cross work Dr. Routley stressed that branch of Red Cross activities which cares for the war-broken veterans who come to the door of Red Cross and who must be helped if the society hopes to carry out the best traditions of Red Cross since its organization seventy five years ago. Over one hundred thousand such Canadians have been cared for in various ways by the society. Disaster relief in recent years has engaged much of the time and resources of the society, one million dollars having been expended in the last four years. The work of the Junior Red Cross with its ideals of good health, good citizenship and international friendliness has grown not only in Canada but throughout the world, while the courses in home nursing have been of wonderful value and have been in some measure responsible for the institution of such training in collegiate institutes. Public Schools, in the opinion of Dr. Routley might well begin courses in home nursing and domestic science, so essential are these subjects in the future health and life of the country.

Started in Saskatchewan

Begun about twenty years ago in Saskatchewan, a most spectacular phase of the Red Cross Society.... outpost hospital service.... is now found in every country where there are hinterlands. A great and magnificent work is being accomplished by the nurses, missionaries of good health and succour to those most in need. It was the proud record that in the 1,700 confinements which the nurses of necessity had to assist without a doctor, not one maternal death had occurred.

All this great work, a few aspects of which Dr. Routley had touched in his fine address, was possible only through the good graces of the people of the old, settled districts who had the outlook on life and belief in their responsibilities to brother man and sister woman to realize that nothing could be done without their generous help. His eighteen years with the Red Cross had made Dr. Routley firm in the conviction that the Canadian Red Cross would in the years to come be the greatest unifying force in Canada.

Universality Emphasized.

The universality of the Red Cross was emphasized by Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne in his words of encouragement and inspiration to the workers. Not only in war days when Red Cross workers were willing martyrs for this great work, but in days of peace every land needs Red Cross, and the Society is doing a magnificent work in organizing men, women and children to be prepared to meet any emergency. In the time of disaster, fire, flood, drought, the hand of the Red Cross reaches out to aid all those who suffer.

Mr. Payne spoke in highest terms of the work of the Red Cross Society in Belleville, for its increasing labors and the success it has attained and hoped that the workers would be so imbued with the spirit of Red Cross that they would go out and "sell" it, and that an infection of interest and keenness for Red Cross would spread with great rapidity.

The thank of the gathering for the splendid addresses of the evening were conveyed by the chairman who called upon Mr. J. W. Imlah, campaign treasurer, for a few words. Mr. Imlah brought to the meeting the most cheering message of the evening, the fact that the sum of $330 had been subscribed to the funds in advance of the campaign. This far exceeded the advance subscription of last year and was most encouraging to those in charge of the canvass.

Mr. H. C. H. Miller, field secretary, gave many helpful suggestions to the workers in connection with their calls. From the enthusiasm shown by all those present last evening it is expected that the Society's objective of $1,200 will be over reached during the week of canvass.

District Dealer Of Tire Company Gives Banquet

Cliff Baker, district dealer for Dominion Tires, was host to a large gathering of dealers and invited guests at a most enjoyable banquet at the Queens Hotel last night. This affair has been an annual one for some years and last night more than one hundred enjoyed the hospitality of their host. A varied program was carried out with speeches kept to a minimum. E.E.P. Killingsworth, supervisor for the Provincial Tire Corporation was present and spoke a few words to the dealers thanking them for their cooperation and of plans made for future business.

The foyer of the hotel was tastefully decorated for the occasion and every type of tire made by the tire company was on display and many of the dealers spent some time examining the product. A social half hour was then spent before the guests trooped into the banquet hall where Mine Hostess Mrs. Zita Ryan had prepared a most appetizing dinner. During the banquet community singing was enjoyed with Harry Dunlop as master of ceremonies and R. T. Sawyer at the piano. The boys enjoyed the singing with many old favorites in constant demand.

At the conclusion of the dinner, the tables were cleared away and with Mr. Dunlop in charge a most excellent floor show was staged. Audrey May, who led the Argonaut band last fall, won the hearts of her audience with tap and acrobatic dancing and many encores were demanded. Tommy White, accordeonist de luxe entertained with many numbers old and new. Bobby Roberts, the "personality girl" gave a number of interpretative dances and the Three Rosebuds gave a variety of dance numbers. The show was an excellent one all through and was much enjoyed.

Mr. Baker with his staff, Norman Wallbridge, Ray Poste, Henry Daley, Lorne Bowers, Joe Whalen and Edward Walt are to be congratulated on the excellence of the pleasant evening provided.

Choristers of Christ Church Sing 'Children of the Chapel' Production is Epoch-Making

Canadian Premiere of Sir Sidney Nicholson's Opera of Days of Charles Second is Masterly and Brilliant in Every Respect

Musical history was made by the gentlemen and boy choristers of Christ Church on Friday evening at the Belleville Collegiate auditorium. It was the Canadian premiere of "The Children of the Chapel," a two act opera composed by Sir Sidney Nicholson, noted English musican and composer and head of the School of English Church Music. The honor of presenting this composition has fallen to the Christ Church choir, and to Mr. George N. Maybee, choir director and church organist, all of whom took part in the school of English Church Music held here a year or two ago by Sir Sidney. The composer knowing this choir which is outstanding among church choirs in Canada because of its large number of boys and of their effective singing chose an apt organization to present his work.

Dramatic Direction Effective

Dramatic in the extreme as the opera is, the presentation was likewise dramatic and full of life. It caught the real flavor of the historic period when church music was revived with the Restoration in 1660. To Group Commander D. C. MacKenzie Hume of the Airbase near Trenton must go high praise for his magnificent dramatic direction and for the production. The progress of the story in music as interpreted by the two very delightful characters of Captain Henry Cooke, whose part as King's musician, was taken by Mr. Arthur W. Simpson, tenor and the famous Samuel Pepys, bass baritone, taken by J. Gilbert Willshire, and by the boys showed direction as effective as any professional work could aspire to. The setting was perfect for the period. There was much acting ability required of the actors, both men and boys, and these requirements were fully reached by the choir members. No direction, no setting, could have been more perfect than the work of the director D. C. MacKenzie Hume, who has taken a deep interest in the little theatre. In this opera he had an ideal vehicle for it is full of music, full of humanity and is inspirational to a high degree.

Musical Director's Part

The musical direction by Mr. Maybee left nothing to be desired. This choir he has built up until it is not only unique in Belleville by its inclusion of boys to make them on integral portion of the musical service of the church, but it is well known across Canada for he has developed some of the finest voices anywhere to be heard. Last evening's attendance was very large and showed a deep appreciation of the work of the gentlemen and boy choristers. Many too of the audience, for the first time, were brought to a realization of the effectiveness of the voice of boys in the music of the church. Acting and musical thought kept even step throughout the opera. Sir Sidney Nicholson's music which captures a great deal of the religious and musical flavor of the period of the Restoration was finely directed by Mr. Maybee, who in the choruses and solos of the men and boys revealed unusual talent and the high quality of training the singers have had under his direction. Mr. Alec Gordon was able to give a musical accompaniment fitting in a marked degree to the spirit of the musical work. As accompanist he caught and expressed the spirit of the composer's work.

An Interesting Story

The story deals with the restoration of the musical service of the Chapel Royal Choir. It is full of dramatic moments of intense interest and the drama does not lag for a moment. Neither does the music which is lyrical as well as dramatic. Captain Cooke as the King's musician soon learns to take pride in the boys, whose work becomes most effective in the chapel service. In the first act Master Humphrey, whose part is acted and sung by Master Hugh Simpson sings a song typical of the period and Michael Wise played and sung by Master Jack Shaddock sings a song with the mother motive. Another boy John Blow, sung by Master Jack Willshire sang most effectively a madrigal "When the Cock Begins to Crow." The character of John Blow appears prominently throughout the opera. Master Jack Rowsome in the role of William Turner was another of the choristers to reveal the fine quality of the voices of the members of the choir. The clear flute notes, like the "native woodnotes wild of which Milton speaks, were marked in every voice of the boy choristers.

The second act brings in much drama with the quizzing of Henry Purcell, destined to be one of the greatest of the musicians of the day, the part being taken by Master Jack Burns. This moves into broad comedy of the healthiest character and the boys all enter the spirit of the occasion. On the bidding of the King's musician the boy sings a composition, later revealed as his own, which provides him with a hearty reception into the company of the Children of the Chapel. In this act there are scenes impressive in their sheer loveliness in the beauty of the robes worn by the boys as well as by Capt. Cooke and the famous Samuel Pepys. There is a service held off stage, which is inspiring in the sound effects of the voices. Some of the music of the period is here introduced. The last scene was another dramatic one, as the boys and the King's musician and Mr. Pepys hold a rehearsal of the masque written by Captain Cooke to show the conquest of evil by virtue. The boys are elves, though dressed in the rich robes of the choir, while Capt. Cooke plays the part of Mercury and Mr. Pepys as Pluto, ruler of the underworld.

Opening the evening's program was a series of choral numbers brilliantly executed by the full choir of Christ Church, a very fit introduction to the historic opera. The numbers were:—

God Save The King—Stanford.

Lord, For Thy Tender Mercies Sake—Farrant (1550).

Jerusalem—Parry (Sung by Boy Choristers only).

Rejoice In The Lord —Purcell.

The balance of the choir and the harmony, the perfect shading and the almost infinite range of effects attainable by a choir of this kind were marked.

Too high praise cannot be given A. W. Simpson as Capt. Cooke, the King's Musician and J. Gilbert Willshire as Samuel Pepys. Both these men were intensely dramatic. They created living personalities before the audience, and were equally effective in singing and acting. Mr. Willshire's powerful voice, is admirably under control, capable of fine effects because of its warmth and feeling. Mr. Simpson's is a tenor of lovely quality.

The acting of the boys as individuals and as groups was effective throughout. Their singing was of an even quality as it seemed part of their very nature and of the very fibre of the opera.

Costumes were perfectly historic even to the buckles on the shoes. The attention spent on the costuming was not lost in the total effect. Every part of the opera, the musical work, the acting, the setting, costumes, the dramatic ebb and flow made a programme which will long be remembered.

Those taking part in the production were:—

Captain Henry Cooke—Arthur W. Simpson.

Samuel Pepys—J. Gilbert Willshire.

Pelham Humphrey—Master Hugh Simpson.

John Blow—Master Jack Willshire.

William Turner — Master Jack Rowsome.

Michael Wise — Master Jack Shaddock.

Henry Purcell — Master Bruce Burns.

HITLER'S REICHSTAG ADDRESS

Chancellor Hitler's addresses have to be weighed and often what is said is not as important as what is not said. Yesterday he did say in his long address before the German Reichstag what is apparent—that Germany will never attend a conference to which she does not go armed. What he means is that in a conference a nation may be overborne by the other nations in a conference but that Germany is sufficiently strong to act contrary to a decision of a conference if she opposes it. That is, that she will have the power to resist and oppose what does not please her. The Chancellor said no conferences solved real issues. Whatever Germany is to the accompaniment of her strength of armaments. But the world knows Germany has been carrying her weight of armaments in every event of an international character since March 1936.

His reply to the appeal of President Roosevelt for guarantees of non-aggression against thirty-one powers for a ten year period or longer was the occasion of the calling of the Reichstag. Hitler covered a great deal of territory in his address of two hours and seventeen minutes.

One point which stood out prominently was his attitude towards Britain and Poland, Britain for the anti-Hitler bloc creation and Poland for entering into the anti-aggression pact with Britain and particularly because he says she turned down a "just offer" to recover Danzig to Germany, in which city Poland was to have port rights, and the question of a route and railway across the Polish Corridor to East Prussia. This prompted Hitler to level the brunt of his attack on European nations upon Britain and Poland. How deeply stung he was shows in his ending the naval treaty with Britain and the peace treaty with Poland. In some quarters of Europe the Polish treaty reference was taken as the one suggestive portion of the address as containing a hint of possible future action. Polish leaders late yesterday expressed the opinion that Poland would resist any attempt to coerce her over the city of Danzig and rights across the "corridor".

In another part of the address, that devoted to President Roosevelt and his appeal for guarantees of non-aggression for ten years. Hitler was pleased to exalt himself among the great of the world by what he had done under difficulty for Germany and contrasted the settled condition into which President Roosevelt had come in America. While Hitler rejected the Roosevelt plan of guarantees he did offer to any countries that would ask for them non-aggression guarantees which would be purely reciprocal. This, said one of the commentators, looked like an effort of Hitler to snatch the olive branch from Mr. Roosevelts' hands to wave it himself before the world. He said Germany had no intentions against the American nations.

Chancellor Hitler refused to define German foreign policy and said that Germany had not violated the rights of any foreign state and took more than usual care to explain the absorption of Bohemia and Moravia.

Once again he raised the question of territory, pointing out that the United States with a population scarcely a third larger than Greater Germany had fifteen times as much territory. He spoke of German colonies bought by purchase or secured by treaty as having fallen to the nations that have colonies. He said Germany had only been getting back her lost colonies. He warned that Germany needed markets and would not let markets be "stolen from her by terroristic intervention or threats."

After all what does Germany want? Or what is her foreign policy? There has been a general opinion that her intentions are selfish. Is her aim the balance of power with the control of Europe and the world?

That question still remains. Hitler's address leaves the far-off things unclarified. The world asks is another crisis to come with another and another. Of crises the world is growing weary. He told the world yesterday that Germany had a mighty power and could not be coerced at any conference as she was at Versailles. This reiteration upon military strength as an influence in economic negotiations and in conferences is suggestive enough. The nations have learned enough of the unsettling character of German propaganda of which Hitler is credited with being a past master.

LAUGHING AND THINNESS

Laughter is usually associated with the fat man. But now it is claimed that there is a way to grow thin—by laughing. Hamilton Spectator referring to an article in the American Mercury says:

"Along comes psychology to give a bump to the time-hallowed connection between fat and jollity. It took a long time to get around to the rotund citizens of the world, but it has arrived. And the apple cart goes over, because apparently obesity is due to worry and neurosis.

Here is the word of Samuel Hochman, M. D. who writes in the American Mercury about the business:

"The old notion that fat people are serene and happy-go-lucky is wrong. They are emotionally unstable. People who are at peace with themselves, who have other interests and pleasures, seldom overeat to a serious degree. It is the lonely, the dissatisfied, the unhappily married, those who feel themselves failures or inferior, who are the valiant trenchermen at table and the nibblers between meals. They are vaguely groping for some kind of satisfaction, some appeasement of the soul."

"Thus does pie line up with psychosis and chocolate sodas with frustration. The extra lamb chop is no longer mere hunger, but some cross-current of the sub-conscious, and cream matches a twisted soul. It gives us a rather grim feeling; one would have thought that psychology would have let the thing drop. People are getting so self-conscious now that it seems a pity that the generation ahead may have to apologize for that second helping or run to a psychiatrist. The "lean and hungry" look that Caesar dreaded may be the norm at last."

A BIT OF LIVING

Although his face is dour all the while,
It may be from some hurt his heart still bleeds;
Perhaps a cheering smile is what he needs.
Don't be afraid to help some soul along.
Even if he has plainly gone far wrong;
A kindly word may open up the way
To keep him on life's path another day.
No one was ever helped to Heaven by blame;
No one was ever cleansed by crying "Shame";
Loving the sinner is the only thing
That shines a tarnished soul to glistening.
Why need YOU judge? And who gave YOU that role?
Who but the Maker reads the human soul?
Sinner or saint, I think each hides his face,
Confronted with a vision of God's grace.
Amid the cure-alls of a frightened earth,
Where people search for new cures brought to birth,
The old, old light shines on our modern day—
The way of Christ is still the Only Way.

CANADA HAS SO LONG DEPENDED UPON THE BRITISH FLEET FOR PROTECTION, the whole world of minor nations also, for that matter, that any aspersions on the strength of the fleet must necessarily be disturbing. The German press of late, has been referring to the British High Seas Fleet as a collection of rotten hulks, obsolete and about as good as so much cardboard, compared to the magnificent new German fleet. John Bull is not accustomed to brag and the policy of the War Office has been to keep close-mouthed upon matters of armaments. However, there has been a gradual easing up of this policy, and Lord Stanhope, First Lord of the Admiralty, in a recent address before the Constitutional Club, was quite frank in his revelations of Britain's naval strength, contending that the Fleet was both efficient and sufficient for the work it might be called upon to do, whatever that work might be. As reported by the London Times. He pointed out that last year 43 warships joined the Fleet. This year a further 60 would join the Fleet, and in the financial year 1939-40, which we were about to enter, no fewer than 200 warships would be in some stage of construction in the private and Royal dockyards of this country.

In every war in which we had been engaged we had always regretted that we did not have more small ships. Approval had been obtained for two new flotillas of destroyers and in addition 20 new fast escort vessels. That was a real increase in the strength and hitting capacity of the Fleet. The new tribal and L classes of destroyers would be of 1,920 tons, almost small cruisers. They were very fast, they had a fine armament, they were good sea boats and were very handy. The escort vessels, small ships of 900 tons, again had high speed and were armed for both anti-aircraft and anti-submarine work; they hoped to produce them very rapidly and have them at sea probably next year.

In addition they were doing a tremendous work in the dockyards in the modernization of ships and in the strengthening of the decks of ships of the mercantile marine so that they could take anti-submarine and eventually anti-aircraft guns. They had to wait until these ships come into port to undertake the work, which could be done only when the owners could spare them from their ordinary duties, but by the end of the year they hoped that 1,000 of these ships would have been converted

The men of the Navy were magnificent figures—great, deep-chested men full of health and strength, as alive and keen as mustard. If anyone wanted to see what this nation could produce let them go somewhere in the neighbourhood of the three great naval ports. They would see that so far as the naval population was concerned we were not a C3 nation, but A1 plus.

APRIL 29, 1889.

The annual banquet of the Curling Club at the Hub Hotel was a most enjoyable affair. The spread was an excellent one and reflected much credit upon the caterer, Mr. James V. Jenkins. Mr. W. H. Biggar, president of the club, occuped the chair, and Mr. Angus McFee, vice-president, occupied the vice chair. The toast list was as follows: "The Queen", the National Anthem by the assembly; "The President of the United States" was responded to in an able manner by Col. Strong, U.S. consul at this port; Mr. William Webster gave a song and was compelled to respond to an encore; "The Governor General", "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow"; song by Mr. George Easton; "The Army, Navy and Volunteers" responded to in a patriotic speech by Col. S. S. Lazier; song by Mr. William Webster, "The Red, White and Blue"; song by Mr. D. B. Robertson, "Maggie By My Side"; "Municipal Institutions", responded to by Mr. James Duncan, Reeve of Rawdon, and Ald. James Starling; "Our Patron", responded to by Mr. W. H. Ponton, who also gave a song, and responded to an encore; "Manufacturing Industries", responded to by Mr. Napier Robinson; "The Winning Rink for 1889", was next proposed as a toast, and was heartily received and responded to by Col. Lazier and Mr. William Webster. Those who composed the winning rink were Messrs. John Fenn, J. Ward, William Webster and Col. Lazier, skip. Mr. Joseph Ward was also winner of the Ritchie medal, but unfortunately it and the Biggar medal were locked in the maker's safe and could not be presented at the banquet. The toast to the president was responded to by Mr. Biggar, and the toast to the host and hostess was responded to by Mr. Jenkins.

A Wisconsin Cheese Jubilee

The annual convention of Wisconsin Dairymen's Association on March 21 and 22 was occasion for an 18-page souvenir edition of the Sheboygan Press, the cover pages in colors. It is Wisconsin's diamond jubilee cheese year, the first cheese factory having been opened at Ladoga by Chester Hazen in 1864 — the same year that Harvey Parrington started operating the first commercial cheese factory in Canada, down near Norwich. From Wisconsin came many of the Holstein cattle with which Ontario dairy herds were founded a half-century ago.

Sheboygan county, the Press reports, has 40,700 milk cows, and the farm value of its dairy herds as of January 1, 1938, was $3, 215,300. Farms in that county produce about 249,000,000 pounds of milk annually.

Celebration of the 75th year of cheesemaking in the State starts off with a national advertising campaign, and 10,000 salesmen will take part in a concerted drive. The April celebration and sales drive is first step in a general program to increase consumption of Wisconsin cheese.

Wisconsin produces half the cheese supply of the United States and the Cheese Exchange at Plymouth sets the price for the nation. An interesting article in the special edition of the Press tells of a session last August when the exchange functioned for a first time under new rules designed to induce competitive bargaining. Eleven carloads or between 225,000 and 250,000 pounds of cheese, were offered and 90,000 pounds sold. The price established was 10½ cents for twins and cheddars and 11 cents for daisies and longhorns. On the board of the previous week 3,500 pounds of cheese was offered and sold.

The souvenir edition contains a luscious line of display advertising. The Lakeshire Cheese Company of Plymouth uses its space to print 20 questions and answers on cheese. "What was the largest cheese ever made and how much did it weigh?" is answered as follows: "Wisconsin dairymen presented a 3,744-pound cheddar cheese to a Chicago newspaper in 1935. A 2,025-pound cheese featured National Cheese Week." Mr. E. C. Dickerson, formerly of this city, who has sent a copy of the Sheboygan paper to Mr. Fred Dean, manager of the City Dairy, probably could have provided a more accurate answer. The first mammoth cheese was made in Oxford, at the Harris factory near Ingersoll, and weighed 7,000 pounds. That was in 1868, and during the next 20 years many other cheese were made in this country ranging from 600 to 5,300 pounds. The largest ever made however, was produced at Perth, Ontario, in September, 1892. It weighed 22,000 pounds, and was exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago the following year.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

- Faith in Medical Practice

Some capable and successful physicians are still inclined to smile at faith cures, absolutely forgetting that part of their own success is due to the faith their patients have in them. And this faith is inspired by their manner or method of treating their patients.

Sometimes physicians have been startled to meet former patients, for whom they felt nothing much could be done, walking briskly down the street in apparent good health. And this good health is often not only apparent but real, because the individual has been given hope by his faith in somebody or something—another physician or perhaps a non-medical healer. This faith has encouraged him to get up and about, and this keeping up and going about has strengthened his circulation and lung power, given him a natural appetite, helped to regulate his intestine, and so strengthened his whole body that he 'wants' to get better, to live longer. It has been well said that hope is life's greatest medicine.

In speaking of faith in medical practice, Dr. Siegfried Block, in a talk before the Pan American Medical Congress, said

"In private practice the personality of the doctor and his ability to gain that confidence with which no one can compete is the essence of this subject. Patients seeking help, mental or physical, from a physician want to be inspired with faith. This kind of faith is very close to that which offers consolation from religion. We all know that doctors as well as patients differ in their personal qualities. That is why one patient may dislike this or that physician and have an abiding faith in another."

The general practitioner, as well as the specialist in every branch of medicine must ever keep in mind that it is the way he treats his patients, his real or personal interest in him (as well as in his ailment) that not only inspires faith in him as a physician but actually may be just what is needed to restore lost health.

MAPPED HONEYMOON

Margaret Bourke-White and Erskine Cadwell, whose marriage was announced last month, selected the wedding place — Silver City, Nev.—from the map furnished by the pilot of an airplane in which they were traveling. The bride insisted that she always had wanted to be married in a romantic spot and Silver City sounded romantic. They rented a car at Las Vegas airport and drove to Silver City to determine whether it really was as romantic as it sounded. They found it to be a Ghost town, once a flourishing mining place. The Justice of the Peace suggested that witnesses could be supplied at the Silver City Salon provided the wedding was held there. The town boasted a church, but it hadn't been used in years and nobody knew where the key was. But the key was found on the latch. And so, in an abandoned church in a Ghost town of Nevada, Margaret and Erskine became man and wife.—Leonard Lyons, in New York Post.

SARTORIAL COURTESY

What a well dressed American should wear in the presence of British royalty when it visits this country, appears to be agitating the minds of a considerable number of our democratic countrymen.

They might profit by an incident that occurred a good many years ago.

A group of American bishops of the Anglican faith were invited to England by a group of English bishops. Aware that bishops in England wear knee-breeches the American prelates supplied themselves with abbreviated trousers, as a mark of courtesy to their hosts. What was their surprise, when they were met at the dock in England by a committee of bishops, wearing long trousers in honor of their guests!

American diplomatists formerly were advised that the only uniform they needed was "the plain habiliments of an American gentleman."

And that is all any American will need on the occasion of the forthcoming visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth to Canada and the United States.

Their Majesties presumably will wear the clothes to which they are accustomed.

Americans should do the same.—Detroit Free Press.

STILL PLENTY SNOW IN NORTHERN WOODS

Old Man Winter appearently is dying a lingering death in the fields, woods, streams and lakes in the northern part of the county, according to the Bancroft Times. There is still plenty of snow in the woods and the lakes of the district are still ice-bound, a northern report states.

The report goes on to state that a horse-drawn vehicle was seen travelling on the ice-covered surface of Baptiste Lake last Saturday evening. However, the weather has moderated to some extent since that time and with the advent of real warm weather, it mal be only a matter of a short time before the lakes are free of their ice-shackles.

OPENING DAY

By Robert F. KeKogle

After months of weary waiting
Could you bear to stay away,
When some mountain stream is calling
On opening day?

Could you give your best endeavour
To your daily work,
Each detail its proper measure
And no duty shirk?

Spring is back among the mountains
Green-things scent the air,
Trees are budding. ferns are springing
Through the leaf-mould everywhere.

Hark, your favourite stream is calling,
Let no laggart bid you stay,
Out, away, from care and worry!
On the opening day.

Capital Close-ups of Week

By ROSS MUNRO

Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, April 29—(CP)— Possibilities of a royal prorogation of parliament wane as fresh disputes loom up in the Commons over national defence, monetary policy and the wheat problem.

There are only 10 working days left for parliament to conclude its work in time for the unprecedented ceremony and even government strategists admit "it looks hopeless". It is practically the unanimous opinion of private members that an adjournment will be taken May 12 until the royal tour is completed. Then parliament will re-assemble for another month or so, before it is prorogued and possibly dissolved.

All parties fear possible criticism if the session is rushed to a conclusion now but there is a remote chance that the government will drop some proposed legislation and wind up the House before the King and Queen arrive.

Conservatives, nettled by Defence Minister Mackenzie's attack on the record of the Bennett government, plan a sharp retort and likely will prolong debate on defence estimates. The Social Crediters are going to campaign further in the commons for issuance of new currency.

Wheat Gossip

Hottest question of the week is whether the government will jump its proposed initial wheat price from 60 to 70 cents a bushel, with definite indications that if it remains at 60 cents some of the Liberals from the western wheat areas will break with the party.

Mark Senn (Con. Haldimand) says he thinks Agriculture Minister Gardiner will leave the price at the lower level while Joseph Thorson (Lib. Selkirk) and Dr. Thomas Donnelly (Lib. Wood Mountain) are hopeful the west will get 70 cents and the acreage bonus. There does not seem to be a chance that the demand of the western markets conference for continuation of the 80-cent guaranteed price will be met.

Centre Block Smalltalk.

Coly. J. E. L. Streight (Lib. York West) returned to the Commons this week after a lengthy illness, looking as fit as ever. . . . Justice Minister Lapointe has been given many nicknames during his public career but the one he likes best is "the godfather of the 20th Century Liberals."

J. C. Landeryou, the Social Crediter from Calgary, a former chef turned financial expert, is the most consistent gum-chewer in parliament. The hotter the argument the further he leans across his desk and the harder his jaws go.

Hon. C. H. Cahan, the Montreal Conservative, warns members against the strains of public life. The caution of the 77-year-old former secretary of state is well founded, for 18 members have died since the present parliament was elected in 1935.

The versatility of Agriculture Minister Gardiner was shown at a Liberal gathering here when he did a sailor's hornpipe with creditable agility. It proved so popular that he gave a repeat performance. He says he learned the hornpipe as a boy in Huron County, Ontario.

The National Veterans survey, begun nearly six weeks ago, has resulted in an enrolment of 42,000 Canadian ex-service men for service in a national emergency.

Budget Sidelights.

The real human drama that tense afternoon of the budget speech was not what Finance Minister Dunning said, but how he said it, how his voice sounded, how he stood. Despite his illness, he breezed through his 1½-hour address with ease and felt so good after it he left the house and went to a cocktail party.

But the Prime Minister was worried during the speech. Sitting in the seat next to the Finance Minister's right, he watched him intently all the time and whispered to him frequently to take it easy. Resources Minister Crerar was the Finance Minister's "copy boy", taking each sheet of the speech from him as he completed reading it and piling them neatly on the desk.

The reception to the speech was the most subdued in years but Mr. Dunning did not attempt to rouse applause by rhetoric. The only laugh was the mention of the government's efforts to stimulate the use of apple cider in the making of vinegar.

The Finance Minister tells cabinet colleagues that he will remain in politics and scoffs at suggestions he will head the Tariff Board.

Under the Peace Tower.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King's approval of the Roosevelt peact proposal to Hitler and Mussolini pretty nearly did not get public recognition. It was duly transmitted to Washington by the United States Legation here but was lost in the confusion at the State Department the day the messages poured in from nearly every country of the Western Hemisphere. A hurried telephone call to Ottawa confirmed it had been sent and another frantic scurry through the telegram file located the Canadian message and it was made public.

The Prime Minister's intimates feel that he will stand the heavy schedule of the Royal tour easily and still be heady for an election trip a few months later. They say he has an amazing ability to drop off to sleep for short periods and conserves his energy in this way. The only thing that will prevent the King and Queen coming is the actual outbreak of war involving Britain, according to the External Affairs officials.

One of the most persistent lobbies of the present parliament was behind the small loans bill which passed both the Senate and the House, limiting interest and other charges by small loan companies to two per cent a month. For three years the lobby has been battling for the two per cent rate in committee, buttonholing members in the corridors and distributing pamphlets and booklets. The fight was won when the government itself presented the legislation.

When the Canada-United States and United Kingdom-U. S. made treaties crop up in corridor gossip, those who claim to know the inside story of the pacts contend the greatest contribution is not economic but political — drawing the three countries closer together. They contend this will be clearly shown after a year's operation of the treaties . . .

The Maritimers make up the most taciturn group in the Commons but the government's new fisheries legislation, promised for next Tuesday is going to send them into action. Practically every eastern member will have his say. J. J. Kinley (Lib. Lunenburg) predicts the legislation will be a definite contribution to the east, particularly the salt-fish fishermen... K. J. Cochrane (Lib. Cumberland, N. S.) is mysterious about a budget speech he will make next week, claiming it breaks entirely new ground...... the Halifax submarine scare caused scarcely a ripple among Maritime M. P.'s with most of them calling it a fantasy and a myth . . . good things are being said about the proposed fishermen's naval reserve plan ....

2 NEW WORDS

Two unusual words have been conscripted into the vocabulary of educationists in the United States. They are "holist" and meristicist," and were used in a recent conference of educators over there .

A holist, it appears, is an educator who believes that a school is responsible for the development of the student's whole personality. A meristicist, on the other hand, believes that school should only be expected to concern itself directly with the teaching of recognized subjects such as mathematics, history, geography, etc., and should leave the development of morality and personality mainly to the parents of pupils and to the pupils themselves.

On its face this looks as if a couple of fancy words had been attached to very simple ideas. There is a danger in these highbrow labels. Parents who are too lazy or too indifferent to discharge their proper duties toward their children may try to get away with it by explaining that they are disciples of holism.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Reindeer require little care, obtaining their own reindeer moss in winter and living on grasses and other vegetation during the summer.

About 100,000 grasshoppers were "branded" by spraying them with red lacquer last summer, in hope of learning more about migrations of these pests.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, Apr. 29 (Special)—Almost one hundred and twenty fathers and their sons and friends crowded the spacious basement of King Street United Church on Wednesday evening on the occasion of the annual Fathers' and Sons' banquet sponsored and presented by the Men's Club of King Street Church, and with almost double the attendance originally planned for the affair was an unqualified success. For a number of years the Men's Club have been sponsoring these banquets, but this season's affair has topped all other previous functions both in attendance and in interest shown. Ladies of the church catered for the event, and the daintily decorated tables were filled to capacity while the delicacies served were beyond reproach.

Community Singing.

Clare Northey, retiring president, occupied the chair and handled the toastmaster's duties. After all had been fed to capacity community singing was enjoyed for a few moments with Leslie Hearts, choir leader, conducting and accompanying. The toast to Our Sons was proposed in fitting style by F. G. Bayliss who outlined the development of the average boy and what he means to the father. The response was made by young John Mawson, and he was heartily applauded for his effort. The toast to Our Fathers was proposed by another teen-aged lad, Elmer Weaver, and his effort was particularly worthy of the applause, which it received. Response on behalf of the fathers was made by Jas. McKibbon, and the chairman explained that until about an hour before the affair the speaker had not known that he was to give the reply. A pleasing diversion at this point was Grant Rathbun's vocal solo, "Trade Winds", and as always his efforts were much appreciated.

At this point the chairman called on E. L. Fraser, chairman of the nominating committee, to present the slate of nominations of officers for the forthcoming year. The list is as follows: Honorary president, Rev. J. U. Robins; past president, Clare Northey; president, James McKibbon; vice-president, David Harrison; secretary, W. M. Brown; treasurer, F. C. Bayliss; committee chairmen, Messrs. W. H. Ireland, O. M. Newton, J. C. Gillan, James Cox. The nominee for the president's office, Mr. McKibbon, declined the honor proffered him, but after several other officers had spoken and had outlined the cooperation of the group all the way through he finally accepted the nomination, and the entire slate of officers was elected by a unanimous standing vote.

"Quiz" Program.

Probably the most pleasing and interesting of the night's program novelties was the "quiz" presented at this point by Norman Bower. To the platform he called six of the fathers of the audience and placed across from them their teen-aged sons. Included in this group were Clarence Orser, W. H. Ireland, Jas. McKibbon, W. Burroughs, E. R. Smithrim and C. H. Foster, with their sons. J. C. Gillan acted as the timekeeper and scorekeeper, and Mr. Bower explained that this test was an experiment to find out the adequacy of present-day education as given to the growing youth as compared to the education given to the fathers both by schoolmasters and by the hard knocks of experience. Some very tricky quiz questions followed, each being allowed a certain time in which to answer and a certain number of points for a correct answer, and when the smoke of battle cleared away it was found that the youths had overshadowed their parents by a clear 25 per cent margin. One of the comical highlights occurred when the somewhat embarrassed son of W. H. Ireland was asked to name the present provincial parliamentary member for the riding and name his politics. This he was unable to do, and he retired in confusion as his father told a laughing audience that "he knew him as well as I do". A voice from the auidence shouted, "You'll never make a politician of him, Bill!" and more laughing followed. A cash prize of one dollar was given to Elwood Burroughs for having the only perfect score of the evening.

Concluding the affair Rev. Mr. Robins expressed his pleasure at being present, and when Chairman Northey had again thanked the ladies for their good work the benediction was pronounced.

May Review Squad.

Group Captain A. E. Cuffe of the central or group R.C.A.F. command in Toronto was expected to review R.C.A.F. members at the local station on Wednesday, and extensive preparations were made for his visit. Ceremonial drill is being given each afternoon at present, chiefly in order to prepare the troops for ceremonial affairs during the royal visit next month, and from a good source it is learned that after May 1 parades will last all day instead of just during afternoons.

A meeting of the company commanders of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment was held in Trenton Armoury on Friday evening of last week and was attended by Lt.-Col. S. Young of Picton, Officer Commanding the unit, also Majors H. D. Graham of Trenton, B. A. Sutcliffe of Toronto, E. T. Nayler of Madoc, James Inrig of Picton, and Capt. E. W. Matthews of Lonsdale.

A local teen-aged girl, found guilty in Tuesday's court on charges of "incorrigibility", was sentenced by Magistrate E. J. Butler of Belleville to remain in the girls' reform school at Galt until she is twenty-one, a period of almost six years. In passing sentence His Worshp outlined the facts surrounding the conviction and pointed out that this girl has been under surveillance for some time. Her recent escapades have brought her several warnings, and now she will be sent to the institution until she is of age.

Officers of the R.C.A.F. entertained outside militia officers at their dance on Saturday evening last, and included among the guests were Lt.-Col. S. Young and Lt.-Col. G. Allison, both of Picton, with their wives.

Plans Outlined.

Meeting in Trenton Armoury on Wednesday evening of this week, militiamen, members of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, were given a sketch of their proposed duties in connection with the visit of their Majesties, the King and Queen, to Kingston, on May 21st. Major H. D. Graham, Officer Commanding "A" Company, outlined the plans, and stated that it is expected troop trains will pick up militia members at company centres some time late Saturday evening and will move them to Kingston where they will remain on a siding for the rest of the night. In the morning they will be moved to the exhibition grounds in Kingston where they will be fed and prepared for the day and will then move to locations allotted by the committee, there to line the streets for the passing of the royal procession. In preparation for this event troops are training three nights weekly, and must get in trim for the royal visit so that they may put on the very best show possible. It is planned that they will return to Trenton again the same day as the royal visit after the royal train has pulled out.

Notice appears in local papers this week of a reward offered for the finding of the body of the late Percy Knox, dam-tender above Glen Miller, who is believed to have drowned in the Trent River during the winter when he slipped from a dam where he was laboring. Several rumors have spread to the effect that the body has been found, but to date all have proved untrue.

Members of the local Moose Lodge gathered at the Royal Hotel on Friday evening of last week to welcome a visiting official and to enjoy an informal meal and get-together.

WHAT IS THE MOSTUSEFULBOOK IN THE HOUSE?

Encyclopedia Contains a Liberal Education — Accurate Information on Many Topics and Subjects

Of all books in the home the Encyclopedia is the most useful, for it contains concise and accurate information on practically all topics and subjects. An Encyclopedia is an invaluable reference work for people of all ages, from the school child to the grand parent. Its educational value extends alike to all classes of society from the university professor to the unskilled laborer.

Even in ancient times the value of an Encyclopedia was recognized, the first one of which we have a definite record being compiled in the first century B.C. by Pliny, the Roman scholar and naturalist whose "Historia Naturalis" comprised no less than 37 volumes, dealing chiefly with plants, animals and advice for farmers.

The first English Encyclopedia was produced early in the 18th century by John Harris, but later in the same century one was produced by Chambers and this edition really established the Encyclopedia as a standard reference work. It is interesting to note that the first "Encyclopedia Britannica" was also compiled about the end of this century as were the first German and French Encyclopedias.

The early Encyclopedias did not possess the lucid, brief, accurate information found in all good modern editions, but often displayed a great lack of purpose, in that, the authors wrote pages upon pages dealing with the religious and political controversies of the day and often entirely overlooked the real objective of the books—to give concise systematically arranged information on as many subjects as possible.

It is our ability to acquire knowledge that has been responsible for man's advance from the stone age to his present highly civilized state, but the search for greater knowledge continues with unabated interest, especially amongst the younger generation. And this is as it should be, because only through better education can one generation achieve more than its predecessor.

No living person could amass, in his lifetime, even a small percentage of the knowledge contained in a modern encyclopedia, but he does not have to amass this knowledge in his own head. As Dr. Johnson, the great English writer and scholar, once said, "Knowledge is of two kinds; we know a subject ourselves, or we know where to get the information on the subject," and he further added, "Both kinds are valuable".

In the past the high cost of an authoritative encyclopedia has often prevented those who most desire one from becoming the possessor of such a set. But next week the Ontario Intelligencer is going to make it possible for every one of its readers to become the proud possessor of a really good fifteen volume encyclopedia at a cost so low that few will want to be without it.

Watch for the announcement in Monday's issue. Remember this offer is available only to readers of the Ontario Intellgencer.

GALATEA II WINS STAKE

Newmarket, England, Apr. 29 (AP)—R. S. Clark's three-year-old filly Galatea II, by Dark Legend out of Caladay II, yesterday won the 1,000 guineas racing classic here.

City Bee-Keeper Takes His Charges To Outside Quarters

Enclosed in a living curtain of buzzing hungry bees a Church street bee-keeper moved slowly yesterday as he brought his hives from their winter quarters in the cellar to the warm atmosphere of the outside.

Attracted by the smell of honey which he had been preparing as food before he moved his charges, the bees, swooping, darting and circling formed an animated screen about their owner as he placed their homes in position. "They are too hungry to sting," he smiled, as he placed the dark sweet food where the hungry buzzers could get it.

"This year," he added, "keepers will be obliged to feed their bees until the clover season starts. Dandelion and fruit-blossom will scarcely furnish enough food, let alone storage. However, it is money well spent. I would rather have my bees well-fed by the time clover comes in bloom than starve them and have them sluggish."

The bees wintered well, and although confined to winter quarters for nearly a month longer than the period of former years, appear to have suffered no ill effects from their long sojourn in the darkness of cellars and other winter homes.

Would Like Assistance Of School Children to Help in Tree Planting

A request for all school children, members of the city Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, Canadian Girls In Training and other affiliated junior bodies of the city to unite and assist members of the Belleville Bay of Quinte Beaches Association in the matter of tree planting on May 20, to mark the visit of their Majesties in Belleville was made by Mayor Bone this morning.

It is the intention of the Quinte Beaches Association to plant at least one hundred Royal Oak trees, grown from seedlings taken from the Windsor Forest on the location of the civic bathing beach east of the city on this date, with school children of the city assisting. This matter was under discussion at a meeting of the Beaches held this week

"It is a splendid idea to thus mark the visit of their Majesties here, and the King's birthday," commented Mayor Bone, an ardent horticulturist and reforestation advocate. "Thus is one act which will live in the minds of our junior residents. Those who plant them may watch them grow to maturity, and be able to point to one particular tree and recall that on a certain day "I planted that fine tree".

ADVISORY BOARD MEMBER

R. O. Hurst, dean of the Ontario College of Pharmacy, has been appointed a member of the advisory board under the Ontario Proprietary Medicine Act, filling the vacancy caused by the death of the late Dean Heebner.

Purse Presented To Mr. Elgin Ford At Aylmer

Mr. Ford Has Assumed Management of Walker Store at Belleville

Before his departure from Aylmer Mr. Elgin Ford, manager of the Aylmer branch of Walker Stores, for the Belleville branch to which he has been promoted as manager, was tendered a farewell by the leading business men and professional men of Aylmer. Mr. Ford was a guest at the dinner of the Rotarians and at the close of the meeting Mr. Ford was surprised to find himself the object of an address of goodwill and presentation from the citizens of Aylmer.

A souvenir address on behalf of his associates in business, church, and sports circles was read by Rev. W. D. Stenlake who bade him farewell on behalf of the Aylmer bowling club, of which he has been president, on behalf of St. Paul's United Church and Sunday School in which he had been a teacher, a steward and an usher, and on behalf of the Business Men's Association. A purse of fifty silver dollars was presented by Mr. H. M. Durkee from the organizations and bodies represented.

Mr. Ford in reply touched on the pleasant relationships he, Mrs. Ford and Isobel had with the people of Aylmer in the six and a half years' residence there and thanked the organizations and their representatives for the kind sentiments and the generous gift. Dr. Grant Johnson, president of Aylmer Bowling Club and H. E. Armstrong, first vice president of the Aylmer Business Men's Association, expressed regrets at losing Mr. Ford. Mention was also made of the loss felt in baseball circles at the departure of Mr. Ford who was an ardent supporter of the game.

Mr. Ford who has arrived in Belleville and assumed the management of the Walker Store is succeeded at Aylmer by A. M. Douglas, late of Charlottetown, P.E.I., who was a guest at the farewell banquet to Mr. Ford.

The Stars Say

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Sunday, April 30

SUNDAY'S horoscope is a fairly interesting one, having the forecast of a matter coming up for definite action, probably in a rather unusual or rare chain of circumstances. It might be in the realm of the metaphysical or the occult. In all matters finances may be jeopardized unless some economy of self-restraint be exercised.

Those whose birthday it is may expect a rather unusual matter to come up in a peculiar connection. It calls for prompt and possibly decisive action. This demands sound consideration because of its curious angles and because there is a note of warning against extravagance

A child born on this day may be fairly talented and ambitious. However, it may be disposed to attribute too much to "front," show and appearances.

For Monday, May 1

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is for a rather conflicting state of affairs in which certain lures to intellectual, cultural, social or sentimental preoccupations must give way to very determined efforts in the way of diligence, hard work and commonplace activities. Business especially matters of writing, publicity or kindred things, demands such sacrifice.

Those whose birthday it is may find themselves in a year in which they may be torn between the indulgence of native tendencies in artistic, intellectual, social or emotional urges, and commonplace affairs which demand application, hard work and definite consideration. These concern writings, publishing or private correspondence.

A child born on this day may have much innate talent of an intellectual, artistic or cultural nature. Important romantic and social inclinations demand expression, while more sordid factors of existence may not be neglected.

"Never Say Die," is the title of Martha Raye and Bob Hope's new comedy which comes next to the McCarthy Theatre

Advice to the Lovelorn

Marriage Possible on Fifteen a Week?

Dear Miss Fairfax

I am 18 and he is 22. He has a small job, making $15 a week, and which will never give him more than $25. Lately he has given me an engagement ring, and we talk about getting married. But do you think we should get married?

We know how we would have to skimp and save; we know it will mean giving up a lot of things we now enjoy. Would it be wise to take this chance? Our families are in favor of the marriage if we think we can manage.

Sue

For two people to manage on $15 a week will require a degree of financial wizardry beyond my ken. But as you tell me your family look with favor on your marriage to thit young man, perhaps they may be willing to help out. If he can never expect more than $25 a week from his present job, why doesn't he fit himself for something else? Vocational Training, which has helped many young people to get better salaries, is to be had for the asking.

Should Parents Share Children's

Dear Miss Fairfax

Is a daughter under any obligation to have her father live in her home? My father and I are not congenial. We get on each other's nerves to the extent that our home life is unhappy. Whenever he comes to our home, the trouble begins. I will gladly contribute to his support elsewhere, and with the aid of my sister, I think it could be managed.

But he's expecting to make his home with either my sister or me. I have tried to be fair, but I know if he comes it will cause a divorce.

Believe me, I'm providing for my old age, so that my little son will not be faced with the same problem. I do not think it is fair for parents to expect to share their children's homes and lives. How can I convey my plan to him without hurting him too much? He is easily offended.

B.K.

If you're convinced that taking your father will lead to a divorce and the breaking up of your home, it would be unwise to admit him. I am afraid this as a case where you can't have your cake and eat it too, and you'll have to risk hurting his feelings in telling him that it would be more convenient if he made his home with your sister, instead of with you.

I suppose I'm a softie, but I'm always terribly sorry for these unwelcome old people. And I wish most heartily that some sort of a home could be endowed for them, worthy of the name. I hope you will not have to depend on your son for maintenance, but in these uncertain days, one can never tell.

At least you will have the comfort of your conviction that parents and children should not live together, if you happen to have a dependent old age.

Going "Steady" Means Serious Business to Her

Dear Miss Fairfax

Do you believe that a girl of 18 and a boy of 19 should go "steady"? Aren't we too young? The boy isn't working. To me going "steady" means serious business, and I don't want to get serious with any boy for at least two years. The boy says he loves me and wants to go "steady", but I don't want to, and as a result we're always quarrelling. What is your opinion?

Anne

I think you have a good deal on your side of the argument, my dear Anne. It's fine for girls and boys of 18 and 19 to have friendships, but as this young man is unemployed and going "steady" means serious business to you, you'd better defer the idea of being engaged.

GOOD MANNERS

"Is it Well With the Child"?

Forever-old and forever-new is this question, "Is it well with the child?" And ever since the Bible asked it, down through the long corridors of time has been echoing and re-echoing, "Is it well with the child?"

When is it "well with the child"?

For the answer, let's quote the entire verse in the Bible—"Is it well with you? Is it well with your husband? Is it well with the child?"

Parents are the standard-bearers for the child. They are the patterns by which the child fashions its life. It is not the maxims repeated over and over again by mother and father that have any real value to the child. It is when he sees these maxims come to life that their meaning is revealed to him. His parents practice what they preach, and unconsciously this truth as its influence on his words and deeds.

If in a child's home there are parents who are courteous to each other and to him and to everyone else, if there are kindness, consideration and devotion, if there is carefulness in personal habits, the child in that home is happy and fortunate beyond words.

But, when parents are discourteous, quick, bicker and scold, careless in dress, table manners, and talk, the child of that home is unhappy and unfortunate beyond words.

The home is the child's world. What he sees and hears in that home, makes an impression on him that can never be completely erased.

Proverbially, children are mimics . . . . for better or for worse.

Courtesy Tip

I am constantly surprised at the number of people, otherwise kind and thoughtful, who hang up the telephone receiver without saying "good-by" It takes half a second to say "good-by" and thereby finish the telephone conversation politely. To hear an unexpected click in one's ear, as the telephone is hung up at the other end of the wire, without the formality of a "good-by", is neither pleasant nor necessary.

LIBRARY CORNER

April 29, 1939.

Dana Lamb, grand-nephew of Richard Dana whose "Three Years Before the Mast" delighted an earlier generation of adventure-lovers, relates in "Enchanted Vagabonds" an astounding tale of modern adventure. He and his wife left San Diego in 1933 in the 166-foot boat Vagabunda, a queer frail combination of sailboat, kayak, surfloat and canoe which they themselves had designed and built. With less than five dollars between them, a limited supply of foodstuff and equipment, they braved an ocean and a stretch of coast country equally treacherous. The voyage along Baja California, across the Gulf of California, and the coasts of Mexico and Central America to Panama occupied three years crammed with adventure bordering at times on the unbelievable. Trapped in an extinct volcano, bitten by hunger-maddened coyote, upset in a "traffic-jam" of whales, caught in a bed of quicksand, lost in shark-infested lagoon are but a few of the exploits in a book in which something happens on every page. But it is not only a travel story; it is an amazing record of the courage and enterprise of two young people in an intrepid quest for physical and spiritual freedom.

Rene Belbenoit is the only survivor from Devil's Island to ever reach the haven of the United States alive and to tell his story. "Dry Guillotine" is his story, written from an extensive diary kept during fifteen years of imprisonment in the French Guiana prison and preserved by him in oilskin during the long interval of 22 months between his escape and his arrival in the United States. He tells briefly of his early life, his war experiences, the crime for which he was sent to Devil's Island at the age of twenty-one. The remainder of the book tells of the horrors of a life more terrible than death and of death more gruesome than fiction, and of an escape overland through Central America and Mexico to Los Angeles in hardships almost as horrible as those endured in the prison. As the author passionately hopes, the book should aid materially in the abolition of a vile penal system which has unbelievably been permitted to operate in a civilized world and which with the incarceration of Rene Belbenoit had actually entertained 46,635 "guests" since its establishment in 1852.

"Going to the Fair" is a preview of the New York World's Fair which opens tomorrow commemorating dramatically the 150th anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the new American nation. The book is comprised chiefly of fine photographs accompanied by descriptive articles. Foreign representatives in the United States have contributed descriptions of the fascinating exhibits of their respective countries. In addition, it contains suggestions of where to stop, where to dine and many other bits of information for the prospective visitor of the Fair.

Another copy of Adolf Hitler's book "Mein Kampf" is added to the library collection this week. It is the complete unexpurgated edition made under the supervision of Dr. Alvin Johnson of the New School for Social Research and assisted by an editorial board including, among others, John Gunther, John Chamberlain and Carlton J. H. Hayes. It is to this book containing principles avowed fifteen years ago that one must look for the key to Hitler's true course of action, not to the promises he has made in his speeches, nor to the treaties he has signed. The experts on the editorial board have added a running commentary to interpret and explain the text.

Fashion Flashes

By ALICE ALDEN

Crisp and neat housecoats are in demand as the weather grows warmer. A grand number is a twin print polka dot cotton, the top light with dark dots, but with dark collar to match the skirt with its light dot. The top is buttoned the skirt slide-fastened and attached. A separate, cummerbund buttons on.

Every eye is smitten with a new frock. It is of soft, light gray woollen, its high square neck set off by ruffle on ruffle of white pique. The long, tight sleeves have ruffled pique cuffs. Done on princess lines for the young, slim figure.

A clever deception is the dress that looks like a suit. A tulip-print pure silk frock is made just like a jacket suit, the coat collared in velvet. The skirt is pleated all around.

DAINTY FEMININE LOVELINESS IS AIM

By HELEN FOLLETT

FASHIONS change and girls change with them; figures, complexions, color of the hair, manner of walking, speech and behavior go through a process of evolution. A prankish Sis Hopkins shears off her pigtails, gets a permanent wave and immediately looks and acts like a sweet little cherub. It's wunnerful.

From a simplicity of dress that was well nigh a frenzy we've waltzed into a whirl of ribbons and laces, ruffles and general swish that has so much feminine appeal it is unseemly that any of the sisters should be driving airplanes and motor cars or carrying the hod up and down the ladder for the purpose of bringing home the bacon.

Old fashions become new ones and now we must create loveliness that is dainty and delicate. Modern woman takes on a cameo-like appeal—cameo-like features, cameo-tinted finger-nails and lips which no longer mar her as sophisticated because the pigment has faded to a subtle tone to match her flawless talons.

She's Artful

She looks innocent but she is an artful one. She is lusciously pink and white of face and she gets that way by knowing how to manipulate to best advantage those cute little jars and bottles that she lugs home from the cosmetic counter. There are overtones of mauve or orchid to give variation to the finger-nails, to make hands look frail and feminine. She's sweet, this girl. You'd never believe she could swing a mean hand at bridge or knock you flat in a political argument.

Hands must be soft and delicate. One no longer cares whether or not they "have character".

Watch your lipstick now that you wear a basque made of flowered fabric that looks as if it were snatched out of the crazy quilt that grandma made in 1880. Don't let it look like old 1938. There are new offerings made by the high priests and priestesses who direct the cosmetic affairs of this hay wire world. Get one that is on speaking terms with your nail polish.

Be cannie with all the elements of make-up. We're wearing skirts that are almost kilty; we're flouncing round in little girl dresses. Join the old-fashioned cult and march in the beauty parade.

CAMEO BEAUTY
Shows old-fashioned trend in new styles

Crisp smartness is the key to some of the nicest Spring clothes. It is typified by a frock of tiny black and white checked taffeta made with a button closing from throat to hem, a black leather belt and detachable white pique over collar and tiny pique under-edging to the short sleeves. The fit is snug, the skirt swingy and flaring.

An obliging blouse—for either a tailored or soft suit—has vertical bands of pleated lace marking its shirtwaist front. The neck is outlined by a tiny lace frill that ties with a narrow fabric bow. The fabric is of crepe in pastels and white.

BRINGS FAMOUS REPLICAS TO AMERICA

LIBERAL MEMBER

Budget Under Barrage

Mr. Johnston said western members could not force their will on parliament. Saskatchewan members constituted only 11 per cent of the Commons.

The budget was under heavy barrage for five hours from opposition benches, during which spokesmen for the three opposition groups vigorously condemned the budget for its "failure" to carry out 1935 election promises, reduce taxation or cope with the vital problems pressing this country.

A want-of-confidence amendment was introduced by Hon. J. Earl Lawson, Conservative financial critic, detailing his charges of inaction and waste. M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. spokesman, followed with a subamendment deploring the fact the government had not seen fit to reduce the sales tax although it was providing a reduction in certain corporation taxes.

Mr. Lawson said government revenues were down, as revealed in the budget, not because of unemployment or the wheat guarantee but because the administration was "weak and wasteful."

Jenner's Discovery of Vaccination Presaged End of Smallpox Scourge

Pock scars are usually left on the foreheads and faces of victims of smallpox. Usually the worse the disease, the worse the pock scars, and I have seen cases so bad that the pox will appear inside the mouth. In really bad cases, I have seen horrible facial disfigurement.

When a person first contracts the disease, he is extremely sick, right from the start. Sometimes the victim dies during the first few days of the infection. Some die later, not of the smallpox, but due to pneumonia which sometimes develops as a complication of the disease.

Extremely infectious, smallpox takes about twelve days to show symptoms after the person has been exposed to it. In practice, therefore, we quarantine for sixteen days all children who may have been exposed. We specify this period because by that time we know whether or not the child is going to develop the disease.

Most of us have heard people speak with bated breath of 'black' smallpox. And well they might, for it is a terrible thing. Not that it is a special brand of the disease, though, for it isn't. It is just a particularly virulent attack of the regular disease. The pox are so numerous that they all run together, and blood oozes out into the skin and forms a black mass. For that reason it is known as "black" or "haemorrhagic" smallpox. I have often heard of people dying of this disease, but I can say truthfully that I never had a death from it in my practice. I guess I've been lucky.

Smallpox is a very old disease. In the distant past it was well-known in the Orient, but a few hundred years ago it struck the western world. During the 18th century it spread so rapidly that large cities like London were in a perpetual state of epidemic with a steady toll of deaths, season after season, year after year. Investigators estimate that smallpox at that time was responsible for one in every ten deaths in England, and almost everyone was marked with the disfiguring scars of the disease.

The disease was running wild, so to speak, and no man knew anything about controlling it. Then came an English doctor named Edward Jenner, who gave some study to it. He had been at this some time when he noticed that English milk maids were seldom infected with the disease, and consequently they nearly all had fine, clear complexions. Working among them, he found that although few of them had had smallpox, most of them had had cowpox, a mild disease caught from cows.

Immediately Dr. Jenner began to question whether the two diseases mightn't be the same, cowpox being a mild form of smallpox. The more he studied them, the more he was convinced of their relationship. One day he made a scratch mark on a boy's arm, and rubbed in some fluid from the pockmark of a milk maid infected with cowpox. The area he rubbed became red and swollen and pained the boy for a day or so, but it soon healed, leaving nothing but a round scar. The following year, Dr. Jenner took the same boy, and repeated the performance with a scrapings from smallpox. The boy remained in perfect health. Vaccination had been discovered.

Ival Goodman of Reds Boosts Team into First Spot in Loop By Homering in 9th With 1 On

BROWNS MOVE UP

Now in Second Place After Beating Indians by 9 to 8

By JUDSON BAILEY

Cincinnati's one-man gang, Ival Richard Goodman, has boosted the Reds into first place in the National Baseball League and if the charm lasts he might keep them there.

He took Chicago's cocky Cubs by storm in the short series at Cincinnati Thursday and Friday. In the first game he hit a home run with one on base in the first inning and then singled and scored to start an eight-run explosion in the eighth which he climaxed on his next time at bat by tripling with the bases loaded.

He gave the Reds a 7-6 victory yesterday by homering in the last of the ninth with two on base after he had singled home a previous run in the seventh.

This outburst made Goodman the leading home run hitter of his league with three and the leader of both leagues in runs batted in with 12.

Goodman Paradox.

Goodman is a paradox of the 32nd degree and you can't blame Manager Bill McKechnie and Cincinnati Reds for keeping their fingers crossed until they find whether the bubble is going to burst.

In the first place Goodman, who for several years was a St. Louis Cardinals' chattel in the minor league, is small—five feet ten inches high and weighing around 170 pounds. This doesn't measure up to his long range firing and the result is he hits in streaks.

Bad weather held yesterday's big league baseball program to one other game, in which the amazing St. Louis Browns beat Cleveland Indians 9-8 and moved into second place in the American League.

Rookie Johnny Bernardino again was the star with two doubles and a single, driving in five runs. The victory gave the Browns a sweep of the two-game series and shoved the Indians into seventh place.

DOUBTS DISPELLED

Dick Bartell is feeling pretty good these days as are Chicago Cub officials who purchased him from New York Giants in a three-player deal during the off-season. For a time it looked as if smiling Dick would be another in quite a lengthy list of futile purchases made by the Cubs, but an injured ankle that was expected to hamper him came around in fine style and he's been fielding like his old self and meeting the ball with gusto at the plate.

THREE CANADIAN RECORDS BROKEN

Six Manitoba Records Also Shattered in Swim Meet

Winnipeg, Apr. 29 (CP) — Three Canadian and six Manitoba swimming records were cracked in the two-night national championship gala concluded last night at the 25-yard Sherbrook pool here.

Two Winnipeg youngsters led the record-breaking. Seventeen-year-old Kay Gordon slashed a Manitoba mark in winning the senior women's 220-yards free style as the meet opened Thursday and set a new Manitoba mark of one minute, 3 2-5 seconds in taking the 100-yards free style title last night. She took 1 1-5 seconds from her own record.

Margaret Toggart of Winnipeg clipped 1 4-5 seconds from the national 220-yards free style mark for girls under 17 Thursday and four-fifths seconds from the Manitoba junior 100 free style last night, winning in one minute, 5 3-5 seconds, four-fifths over the Dominion record held by Margaret Stone, Toronto.

Gordon and Taggart also swam with Ethel Gilbert and Grace Dick in the invitation senior women's 400 yards free style relay last night to beat a Vancouver four in four minutes, 28 seconds, two-fifths under Toronto Dolphinets' former Canadian mark.

Noel Oxenbury of Vancouver set the only other Canadian mark on Thursday in the 100 yards senior women's backstroke. Her club-mate, Joan Langdon, cracked the Manitoba senior 220 yards breast stroke mark by 16 seconds last night in three minutes, 20 4-5 seconds, but was 3 2-5 seconds over her own national record.

Lynda Adams' long-established superiority in Canadian women's diving was reaffirmed when the Vancouver girl took the 3-metre springboard event from a field of four with 113.4 points for the five compulsory and five optional dives. Betty Morton of Winnipeg was second with 89.75.

WITH THE LAWN BOWLERS

by

GEO. E. WATKIN

The officers and members of our club wish to again thank the Ontario Intelligencer for our column —it is very helpful in keeping our members posted on our activities during the season.

Only 24 more shopping days before [illegible] open.

Joe Black, Fred Harper, Ernie Vanner, C. Sulman and some of the other boys have been bowling all winter; watch them go this summer. But as John Shaw says, the bigger they are the harder they fall.

On Tuesday, May 2nd, the club are holding a banquet in the Y.M.C.A. It is the wish of the President that we get out 100 percent. This is a joint affair so ladies come out and meet the boys it has been a long winter.

Our greens are in excellent shape —Charlie is busy getting them ready to go on the 24th.; take a run up and look them over.

I interviewed Ab Wonnacott a few days ago and asked him if he had anything for the press. No he said. Just tell the boys I am going to be tougher than ever this year.

Joe Black expects to move in his summer home on Yeomans Street about the 24th May.

The club is very fortunate in its selection of officers, Frank Correll our President is a real live wire, under him our club should go right ahead. Charlie Doran our greens manager has proven his worth. Harvey Stewart, chairman of our games I am sure will give us a real program, he is the right man for the job, it is a hard position to fill. Then there is Harold Cross our treasurer, Harold will do everything expected of him, now it is up to the members to get behind these new officers and the success of your club is assured.

Have you signed up your new member yet.

DOMINOES RETAIN DOMINION TITLE IN BASKETBALL

TAKE EARLY LEAD

Hank Rowe Practically Single Handed Tossed Team to Victory

Victoria, Apr. 29 (CP)—Victoria Dominoes defeated Windsor Alumni 37-30 here last night in the fifth and deciding game of the Canadian men's senior basketball championship and retained for British Columbia the Dominion title won last year by Vancouver Westerns.

It was the third time a Victoria team defeated a Windsor squad for the title. Blue Ribbons turned back Windsor-Walkerville Alumni in 1933 and Windsor Assumption College in 1935, both times in Victoria.

Dominoes surged in a commanding lead early in the game as they ran up nine points before Alumni broke into the scoring column.

Several times the Dominoes held a lead of 16 points but Alumni, who prolonged the series to the full five-game limit after dropping the first two tilts, drove back into the running in a gruelling fourth quarter.

Hank Rowe practically single handed tossed his team to victory. Equally at home on the defence with Chuck Chapman or flanking centre Art Chapman on the forward line, Rowe scored 20 of his team's total points. His accuracy was well nigh perfect. In addition to seven field goals he scored six free shots. Jack (Long John) Blair led the Alumni marksmen with nine points.

NEW STARTING GATE GETS SATISFACTORY TEST in TORONTO

CALLING 'EM Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

A boys' exhibition, that is expected to attract over 200,000 patrons at Newcastle-on-Tyne during the next fortnight was officially opened by none other than George Pepper, captain of the Newcastle motorcycle racing team and native son of Belleville, according to a newspaper clipping received by his parents today. We wonder how many times the name of Belleville has ever appeared on the principal news page of a large English newspaper before. There was a picture of George, Belleville, "the Canadian boy from Belleville and captain of the Newcastle dirt track racing team," on the principal news page with the above caption. We know of other local enterprizes that although they've strived strenuously, never obtained so much publicity for this city as, has Pepper. Incidentally while racing at West Ham last week Pepper picked up 24 points, winning in the senior division event. He has completely recuperated from his minor accident of Good Friday, when the frame of his new machine was damaged badly in a crash.

Efforts to interest the East End Club, that flourishing sports organization that functions up around old circus grounds district into sponsoring a junior baseball team in the O.B.A. ranks. The East End Club, organized by a few east hill residents in the interest of sport among the youth of that district last winter, sponsored a fine junior hockey team in the city league last season. The East End Club could still further their prowess in sport by taking over the sponsorship of baseball among the teen aged boys of the city. One of the head executive members and the chief drum-beater of the club is Bill Dennis, former Belleville ball player, who would make an ideal coach for such a team. Napanee and Picton Kiwanis were included in a district junior ball loop with Belleville Kiwanis last year. However, the Belleville sponsors have abandoned their affiliation with ball in Belleville leaving a splendid opening for the advancement of baseball open to the East End Club, who would naturally look to the citizens for financial support in event they decided to accept such a responsibility.

Eddie Porray, 1839 Cropsey Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y., files this one with the Dumb-Dora Department— "I was a member of the Albany, Ga. club in the old Sally League in 1911. We were trailing, 3 to 0, in the eighth inning of a game in Charleston, when we suddenly filled the bases. A herd of cattle was grazing in the outfield and our next batter drove to deep centre. Just as the centre fielder was about to catch the ball, he slipped (slipper, I-said) and fell. The ball hit one of the cows and started a stampede. Retrieving the ball, the outfielder, whose name was Carter, instead of throwing home, fired the ball at one of the cows. All runs scored and we won the game, 4 to 3. It was one of the greatest laughs in baseball.

Jimmy Powers of the New York Daily News observes: "Scout Dick Kinsella picks an All-Time baseball team and leaves off Babe Ruth. (So did Mickey Welch). According to Kinsella: 'Ruth wouldn't have been able to hit fellows like Mathewson, Johnson and McGinnity. They'd have outsmarted him.'...Pirates pitchers are so sore at Gus Mancuso (because he kidded them about their pennant collapse) they are trying to bean him in exhibitions. When Russ Bauers nicked the belligerent catcher, Gus growled: 'I don't know whether you meant that, or not, Russ. But if you did, don't forget I'll be catching quite a few Cub games this summer. I can fill up many a Pittsburg ear with baseballs."

In an effort to fill in the lapse of time between hockey and out-of-doors sporting activities, professional wrestling is slated to return to the local sports calendar next Friday evening, Norm Barriage, of the Hume arena, informed us today. There is to be a slight change in the programs, however. The more agile grapplers of the lighter classes will appear in the preliminaries with top-notch heavies in the main bout. Efforts to have Gentleman Jack Washburn meet Scotty McDougall are pending for the initial main bout. If the local promoters of professional wrestling will confine their talent to recognized wrestlers, such as Washburn, McDougall, Jack Fox, Stein and others internationally known, the shows will doubtless return to previous prestige.

Hail and hearty, Louie Bennett, Ontario's grand old man of the harness racing industry, arrived at the local Fair grounds with his stable of horses yesterday. Louie, crowding 83 summers, hopped aboard a sulky as spry as he did a half century ago. Those two old race horse lovers, Johnny Symons and Garn Ballantyne acted as the welcome committee as has been their custom for years passed.

Kinston may not approve of many of the actions of the Ontario Baseball Association but will agree that the provincial body made a wise choice in selecting Ken Colling, the Belleville sports scribe, as an executive member. Colling, who lives baseball winter and summer, may regain the faith of the district for the Ontario Association and he can be counted on to do all in his power to revive the sport in the district.

Ken Colling was mainly responsible for the reorganization of the Bay of Quinte League last year and, although his hopes of building the circuit to a six team loop this season were shattered, he is still trying to get it going. He has undertaken a thankless job but it is only through the untiring work of men like Colling that sports get over the slumps.

Colling has not undertaken an easy job in representing Eastern Ontario on the Ontario Association. The district has been badly neglected and the provincial body has not many friends but with capable Colling as the ambassador the troubles may be erased.

Colling has called many games in Kingston, as an umpire and while fans did not always agree with some of his decisions they all admit that he was fair and square. The same treatment can be expected of him in his executive position.

He takes over with the Ceneral Ontario League out of business the Bay of Quinte reduced to three, or possible two teams, and minor baseball badly neglected. He takes over a task of reorganizing and reviving ball in Eastern Ontario and if he succeeds he will be worthy of a place in the Hall of Fame in Cooperstown. He can be depended on to make a strenuous effort and the O.B.A. will have more consideration for the district with him holding an executive vote.—W. J. Walshe, Kingston Whig Standard.

"We're Telling You That the Cincinnati Reds are now leading the National League, Goodman's homer yesterday not only won for the Reds, but knocked the Cubs out of the lead position.... The local softball executive made a step forward when they announced all league umpires this summer must wear a black or blue colored umpire's cap....It adds dignity to the position....The local softball regular schedule may be operated on the point system, thus eliminating the replaying of ties the matter is still in abeyance, however....Now the weather is suitable work will soon commence on the proposed dirt track in Stoney Lonesome....Dirt track motorcycle racing will be introduced there later in the season....It's as thrilling a sport as one could desire, with spills aplenty and crashes too frequently dominating ....A goodly number of local anglers left to seek the elusive trout this morning, so we'll bid adieu to sit in at our first O.B.A. executive conflab in Toronto this p.m.

Initial Baseball Practice Will Be Held on Monday

Beginning at the foundation, efforts to completely reconstruct the baseball picture in Belleville will commence at the Collegiate grounds on Monday night, when the season's initial baseball practice will be held. Efforts to interest the youth of the city, especially the younger generation, who are interested in basball, have been advanced by the players' management of the team, headed by Bud Wilkins and Russ Collins.

The team management let it be known early this week that youth will be given every consideration, as a matter of fact the management will lean further than usual in order to inspire and encourage the young men and boys to aspire for team positions this spring. "The veterans have held sway too long, with the result the local baseball picture is one of a deplorable nature and can only be remedied by the injection of younger blood, which we hope will be forthcoming at our spring practices, which commence Monday evening at the Collegiate," announced the players' executive members today.

All positions on the squad are open for competition and will be awarded to the players making the best of their ability during the spring work out practices. The Belleville Intermediates are entered in the Bay of Quinte League along with Napanee, Picton and possibly the R.C.A.F. "Flyers". Boys interested in playing baseball are urged to attend all practices.

LOUIE BENNETT'S RACESTRING HERE

Grand Old Man of Canadian Racing Using Belleville Track for Training

With the agility equal to that of a much younger man, Louie Bennett, Ontario's grand old man of the harness racing industry and veteran of the race tracks, climbed aboard his sulky to inaugurate the horse racing season at the Belleville exhibition park track yesterday afternoon. Mr. Bennett, although he will be 83 years of age this year nimbly saddlied the sulky as he drove his stalwart pacer, Axworthy Gratton out onto the track for the first workout of the racing season.

Accompanied by his son and trainer, William Bennett, the Louie Bennett harness racing stables of Port Hope, arrived to open spring training quarters at the Belleville exhibition park track yesterday afternoon. Louie Bennett, always a lover of pacers, only has three horses in his stable this year, but they are all champions in their own right. Axworthy Gratton, his crack bay pacer, has a mark of 2.07 1-2 while the roan pacer, Tramp Abbe carries a mark of 208 flat. The other horses in the stable are a green colt, Eleanor Brooke, a four year old colt sired by the great Peter Brooke Jr. Mr. Bennett was high in his praises of the colt. "I expect great things from that mare. We will start her for the first time this season, but another year I expect to have a champion there," predicted Mr. Bennett as he nonchalantly straddled a sulky and drove the princely Axworthy Gratton out onto the local track for hte initial drive of the current racing season.

Bankers and Ontario-Intell. Win Matches

"Maple pounders" from The Ontario Intelligencer and the Bank of Montreal will meet on Tuesday night to decide which team will contest the Belleville Sargent team for the Major "B" bowling title at the Recreation Alleys after The Ontario Intelligencer had knocked off Corbys No. 1 and the Bankers took into camp the Houston squad last night in the first playoff round. The bowling in both games was excellent and a large gallery watched the proceedings. Other interest of the night was the challenge match for the suppers between the C.D.S. and the Belleville Golf and incidentally the golfers are going to eat plenty on the store men for they won by a comfortable margin.

The Ontario Intelligencer team was high for the night on all alleys with a 3309 total with Doug Adams leading the parade with a 704 total but Jimmy Ling put together two games of 331 and 336 to lead all trundlers. Jimmy was sure bashing them and got a great hand from the gallery. The Corbys rolled their usual game but the "printers" were hot and were always on top finishing with a margin of 684 pins. In the Bankers-Houston tilt the "pen pushers" put in two thousand games to finish with a total of 2938 with M. Mitchell being high for his team with 731. Mark Storms led his squad with 651 having a 306 game in the second. The scores:

HAMILTON MAN TAKEN FOR RIDE

Two Others Being Detained on Charges of Vagrancy

Hamilton, Ont., April 28—(CP)—Hamilton police today delved into a strange story of a man who was "taken for a ride" and yet lived to tell about it. Two persons are being detained on charges of vagrancy in connection with the affair.

On Monday morning, Mrs. Steve Kir, Beach Road, notified police that her husband was missing. Today Kir returned to his home. He told authorities that on Sunday evening he had returned from a concert and as he neared his home two men accosted him. They told him that they had been hired to murder him. After some discussion, they said that if he would consent to disappear for a few days, they might be able to convince the man who hired them that the deed had been satisfactorily done. Kir accompanied the pair to Guelph where he stayed all day Monday, and then moved on with them to Toronto. Yesterday, one of the men went to Hamilton, collected $250 for the "murder" and returned. The two captors then bought Kir a new hat, gave him $2 and sent him home.

Girls' Basketball.

Promptly at four p.m. on Thursday, just before Easter holidays, the gallery of the girls' gymnasium was thrown open to the most exciting games in girls' basketball this season.

The first game which featured the Belleville and Trenton senior teams, was won by Trenton after a fast-played game, with a score of 20-10. At half time the score was 10-4 for the visitors and although the Belleville team rallied after the first half they were surpassed by Trenton at the closing whistle.

The chief Trenton scorers were Phyllis Burrows, Jennie Langdon, and Ruth Cory, while Joyce Porritt and Elizabeth Pitney—our old stand-bys—did their best for the losing team.

The Grade X Belleville team was, however, very successful and took the game after an exciting period with a score of 16-10. At the half-way mark Belleville was leading 8-4. The Trenton scorers in the junior game were Ruth Janes and Lena McClung while Belleville's outstanding players were Jean Brockway and Marjorie Hales.

Congratulations to the juniors—and may the seniors have better luck next time

Since the official adjournment of the Stamp Club, its members have not been entirely idle, but have been carrying on their work in small capacities. All of us are looking forward eagerly to the arrival of their Majesties on Canadian soil, and if some of us are not able to see them, we should like some small memento to remember their arrival.

Our club members are going to possess cherished souvenirs of the King's and Queen's visit to Canada. Each member is going to purchase three stamps issued to commemorate this great event which will only be put on the market when the King and Queen actually put foot on Canadian soil. As the stamps will not be available here on time, we will send our specially-illustrated, self-addressed envelopes collectively, to Ottawa, where on the first available chance, a one, a two, and a three-cent stamp will be placed on each (such extravagance)! From the Post Office there, these envelopes will be put on the Royal train, cancelled on it with the Royal Coat of Arms, and sent back to very delighted members. On top of all this each member will also receive from the postman another envelope with the special three cent stamp on it, bearing the cancellation of the first day the new set of stamps is issued. With these beauties to proudly show on occasions, a member can also say that these are two by-no-means insignificant souvenirs.

In March, the leading form for attendance was 3TG, with an average of 94.04. This is a small form, hence the next highest is the leader in forms of average size, XC, whose average was 93.3. Technical classes took third place with 3TB and 4TB tying, their average of attendance being 93.06. Owing to flu—and other reasons—attendance was low in March.

Meanwhile, Constable Marcel Therriault of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, left for the landing scene early this morning. Therriault set out in a rowboat from Shippegan, on the mainland, to Shippegan Island. From Shippegan Island he will have to make another trip to Miscou Island.

Cant' Cross Ice

(A Royal Canadian Mounted Police cruiser was reported at Chandler, Que., on Gaspe Peninsula off Miscou Island, but Therriault said it would be unable to cross the Bay of Chaleur due to ice conditions.)

Therriault planned to return this afternoon and take the pilot to hospital at Bathurst, N.B., or Campbellton, N.B., if treatment was necessary.

Dr. A. Robichaud of Tracadie had planned to accompany Therriault but was called upon unexpectedly to perform an operation. Dr. Ulysses Bourgeois of Tracadie then was summoned and was expected to reach the scene of the crash about noon today.

Vibert said that from signs they made the airmen had wanted to remain with their plane overnight because the fuel tank had burst. The fliers feared someone might smoke near the gasoline and cause destruction of the plane by fire.

Down in Marsh Land

The flight ended at 7:55 p.m. E. S. T. when Kokkinaki brought the plane down in the marsh lands of Miscou. The Russians had left Moscow less than 24 hours previously.

The monoplane, the same in which Major Kokkinaki flew non-stop last May from Moscow to Vladivostok, was too badly damaged to be repaired on the spot.

First indication of trouble came at 8.25 p.m. when Constantine A. Oumansky, Russian Charge D'Affaires at Washington, advised the Floyd Bennett Field control tower at Brooklyn, N.Y., he had received word the plane had made a forced landing "south of Hudson Bay."

Oumansky was one of the thousands of persons gathered at the field awaiting the plane's arrival. Previously reports indicated they would arrive at New York soon after six o'clock.

The position given by the fliers indicated they were in the Gulf of St. Lawrence about 40 miles north of Prince Edward Island and preparations were rushed at maritime seaports to send out search ships.

Then, just before 9.30 p.m., a telegraph operator at Shippegan, 25 miles from here on the New Brunswick mainland, flashed out the report of the forced landing.

Will Send Plane

Washington, April 29—(AP)—Colonel Ira Eaker of the army air corps said today the United States army plans to send an amphibian plane from New York to the aid of the Russian fliers forced down in northern New Brunswick.

Eaker said the plane would not be sent until a report was received from another craft en route to the scene.

New York, April 29—(AP)—A rescue plane carrying a physician and four other men took off from Floyd Bennett Airport at 3:17 a.m. EST today on a flight to aid the two Moscow-to-New York fliers forced down on Miscou Island, N.B.

Albert Lodwick, Vice President of the Aviation Corporation, said the trip was undertaken "because the Russians were so kind during the round-the-world flight of Howard Hughes last July." Lodwick was manager of the Hughes flight.

Physician Aboard

In the plane in addition to Lodwick were pilot Paul Clough, Dr. Lewis Specter and two employees of the Amtorg Trading Coroporation, a Soviet concern.

The plane stopped at Boston, where it was joined by another plane chartered by the Amtorg Corporation, and proceeded to Moncton, N.B., 125 miles from the marshy spot where the Russian fliers cracked up in landing.

Russell Thaw replaced Clough at Boston.

$11,679,391 Raised Last Year for All Purposes

Toronto, Apr. 29.—A considerable increase in membership in The United Church of Canada is shown in the statistical report released today by Rev. Dr. Gordon A. Sisco, secretary of the General Council. The membership now totals 707,264, an increase of 8,530 in 1938 over the preceding year. There was also an increase in the number of persons received into The United Church on profession of faith. Total number of persons under the oversight of The United Church of Canada is now 1,742,622 which shows an increase of 13,000 over 1937. Nearly 30,000 baptisms were performed in United Churches throughout the Dominion, an increase of 2,520 over the previous year.

'Back to Nature' Thoughts Spring to Public's Mind as Warm Golden Days Arrive

Seed Catalogues and Plans for Summer Recreations Now Chief Form of Diversion

START HOUSE CLEANING

It's here, believe it or not. And with its coming, the old urge to get out in the great outdoors, to clean up and paint up, and other innumerable "inner feelings" connected with Spring have taken hold of John Public.

Blue spiralling columns of smoke, the pungent odors of burning twigs and dead leaves heralded the annual "face-lifting" of the city yesterday, as home-owners armed with rakes and other ground-cleaning implements tackled the Spring clean-up of lawns, gardens and other spots coated with winter debris.

Today shoots of green grass are visible pushing their way up on lawns, boulevards and other properties in a brave effort to convince the world that Spring is actually in the offing. Maple trees are budding, and although the flood-swollen waters of the Moira revive memories of flood menace, there is a cheery tang to the atmosphere and John Public is awaiting with open arms the formal arrival of the most welcome season of the calendar.

Today storm windows and doors are being removed and relegated to the summer darkness of cellars and garages. Housewives are viewing with speculative eyes, flower gardens and plots where in a few weeks the vivid greens and bright colors of summer blooms will add a lively note. Family cars are getting the annual overhaul, junior is dragging forth baseball and other summer sporting paraphernalia from the attic, sister is contemplating the re-stringing of tennis rackets, while Dad, secretly perhaps in the most of cases, is testing his brassie, driver and niblick, to say nothing of that fishing tackle, and accessories for the family boat.

The gay colors of the seed-catalogued are taking the place of the comic sections of the newspapers on the drawing room table. Plans for the addition to the summer cottage are already formulating in both masculine and feminine minds. Colors for the new paint jobs to be done about the house are furnishing a source of argument. With the new Easter outfits already paraded summer clothes are attracting the attention of the youth and beauty of the city.

In some cases the far-off vista of summer holidays is drawing near with startling rapidity as gaily colored catalogues of faraway vacation spots make their appearance.

All in all the "old Spring urge" is here regardless of the fact the Old Sol is not contributing to the general picture as generously as he might. Spring is in the blood and must come out.

Dr. Frank Buchman To Broadcast On Moral Re-Armament

Toronto, April 29.—Dr. Frank Buchman, initiator of the current widespread movement for Moral Re-Armament, who arrived in Canada this week with a party of twenty from England, United States and the Scandinavian countries to further this programme in Canada, will speak over the national network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on Saturday, April 29th at 7 to 7.15 p.m. E.S.T. on "Moral Re-Armament — The Battle for Peace".

Dr. F. N. D. Buchman founder of the Oxford Group and initiator of the world program of Moral Re-Armament, who is making a brief visit to Canada and will be interviewed over the C.B.C. national network on Saturday at 7 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

Since his last visit to Canada in 1936, Dr. Buchanan has travelled widely in Europe working with national leaders in England, France, Palestine, Sweden and other countries. During the early days of last year's September crisis he presided over a World Assembly for Moral Re-Armament in Interlaken, Switzerland, attended by many Canadians, which stimulated the present national Moral Re-Armament campaign in England.

Moral Re-Armament seeks to apply to national conduct and international policy the standards of honesty, purity, unselfishness and love. "It is the new thinking and the new leadership that everybody wants", Dr. Buchman told the press on his arrival in New York last month. "Moral Re-armament is a world war against selfishness."

Board of Education Estimates $138,963.33 Will Be Cost of Education in City This Year

PROVIDE NEW ROOF

Board Will Requisition Addition Despite Reported Refusal of Council

City Council will be asked to provide the sum of $138,936.33 for the cost of education in Belleville for the school year of 1939 it was shown in the annual estimates presented at the adjourned meeting of the Board of Education last evening.

This is an increase of $1,571.77 over last year's estimates, an increase which is accounted for by the fact this year an approximate sum of $3,500 must be set aside for the complete replacement of the roof of the Collegiate and Vocational Institute.

In the requisition bylaw which will be submitted by the Board, council will be asked to provide the sum of $76,491.84 for the maintenance and salary of public schools and the sum of $62,444.49 for Collegiate and Vocational School. Last year this estimate for public schools was set at $74,025.64, and for the Collegiate Institute and Vocational, the sum of $63,338.92 was estimated for.

Requisition For Addition.

In spite of the fact council in committee has reportedly turned down the application of the Board of Education for the sum of $50,000 with which to build an addition to Queen Mary School, members of the Board will officially requisition for this sum and will ask that debentures for such sum be arranged, it was decided last evening.

Board of Education may as a last resort ask that a vote of the citizens on this addition be taken, if this application is refused by council on Monday evening, it is pointed out by one member of the Board.

Urged by Trustee Rev. A. B. Payne that no time be lost in the preparation of this money requisition, the members were assured by the chairman, Russ Wotten, that it would be arranged in time for the next Board meeting to be presented council, or in the case of more hasty action, that a special meeting of the Board be called.

"This (addition) is a pressing need. We told council that when we went there as a deputation," pointed out Trustee Payne. "If it wasn't very necessary we would not have approached council on the matter."

"I see no reason to appear before council on this matter again," stated Chairman Wotten when it was suggested that another deputation visit council on Monday evening. "We presented our case very clearly, I think."

Committee Formed.

Following the hearing of a deputation from the local Kiwanis Club, with Mr. George Griffin as spokesman, it was agreed by the Board that a committee composed of Trustees Fetterly, Geen, Moncrieff and Cushing be named to meet the Kiwanis regarding the public Kiwanis playgrounds which members of the club wish to present to the Board. The question of legal rights in the event of accident in the grounds during the coming summer had been one of concern to the club, it was intimated. That the Kiwanis Club should "fade from the picture" insofar as playgrounds and interest in juvenile sport and recreation of the city were concerned was a subject of protest on the part of trustees.

"I would be very sorry to see the Kiwanis sever their connection in this regard," stated Mr. Payne, a sentiment which was echoed by Trustee H. B. Fetterly.

An attempt will be made by the committee to arrange matters between Board and Club.

Under a recommendation submitted by the School Management Committee and passed by the Board all public school teachers who have not yet reached the maximum salary are to be given a $50 increase in salary, a recommendation which was passed without discussion.

New Roof on Collegiate

A new roof would be put on the Collegiate and Vocational Institute at an approximate cost of $3,500, half of the amount to be included in the 1939 estimates and the balance to be paid on January 1st, 1940, tenders to be called on that basis, it was agreed under another recommendation passed.

In the report of a special committee of W. Finkle, W. Harrison and R. Stiver, appointed by the Vocational Committee, it was urged that the city night school be again continued this coming year. This report prompted Trustee A. B. Payne to urge that a certain sum be set aside by the Board and the principal of the school informed so that school could be arranged to conform with the sum available for this purpose.

"One year we started off with a terrific bang but we could not stand the pace," pointed out Trustee Payne. "Let us plan the school for the money we have."

The committee had advised that the sum of $2,000 be set aside for this school. It was then moved by P. G. Cushing that the sum of $1,750 be put in the estimates for this school and the motion passed.

Can Use Grounds

Soft ball leagues of the city may use the public school grounds for games and practice this year if managers of the clubs will agree to stand the loss for broken windows and other property damage during the games. It was agreed following the granting of this privilege upon application of the local Ki-Y League. An objection, however, was lodged by Trustee Payne on the grounds that this privilege had in the past been abused.

"There was a terrific amount of damage done last year to property through these games. It seems no one was responsible for this. If people can't respect privileges of this sort, then perhaps it would be better to take away this privilege for a year or so until it is more respected," he argued.

It was pointed out by Chairman Wotten that "this damage was not done while the boys were playing ball but later."

"Are you sure of this," queried Mr. Payne. "Quite" assured the chairman.

"The damage would have been done during the holidays even if they were not playing ball" it was suggested by Trustee Reg Moncrieff.

It was moved by Dr. Kinnear that the request for the use of the grounds be granted "if the clubs will be responsible for any broken windows while at play."

In the report of the special School Safety Patrol committee presented the Board, it was urged that city schools be dismissed at 11.45 for noon hour and that classes again be called at 1:15 in order that more safety may be had on the roads during the usual noon rush. It was also urged that patrols be organized among the older boys in each school and that Sam Browne belts be provided by the Board for these responsible for the safety of the smaller pupils while crossing roads at schools.

Mr. S. J. Dornan, editor of the Dispatch, Alameda, Sask., has been chosen as the official representative of the Canadian Weekly Newspaper Association aboard the pilot train which will accompany the Royal Party on their trip across Canada.

140 MILLIONS WILL BE PAID IN TAXES

Income Tax Payer Given Day of Grace This Year

Ottawa, April 29—(CP)—Sunday will be a day of grace for the thousands of individuals and corporations who in the present fiscal year are expected to pay $140,000,000 taxes to the Dominion Treasury on incomes earned in the calendar year 1938.

April 30 is the statutory limit for filing the returns without penalty but because that falls on Sunday, May 1 will be the limit this year and returns either delivered in person on that day or bearing a Monday postmark will be accepted without penalty.

Estimated Federal income tax collections in the fiscal year ended last March 31 were $142,025,000, but Finance Minister Dunning lopped off the $2,025,000 in the estimate for the present fiscal year.

Two on One Form

When the taxpayers in Prince Edward Island, Ontario and Manitoba make their Federal returns they must compute on the same forms the amount of their Provincial income taxes. The base for computing the taxes is the same, though not the rates of taxation. Ontario's income tax rate is half the Dominion's, for instance.

An example of the way the joint form works in Ontario: A married man with two children has an income of $5,000. Exemptions are $2,000 because he is married and $800 because he has two dependent children, making his Federally taxable income $2,200.

Rate on the first $1,000 of taxable income is three per cent or $30. On the second $1,000 the rate is four per cent, or $40. On the taxable income over $2,000, the rate is five per cent, in this case $10 making the total Federal tax $80.

Then to compute the Provincial tax rates he deducts the $80 from the $2,200 and on the $2,120 pays exactly half the Dominion rates, making his Ontario tax $38. Total of the two taxes is $118.

Plainfield

Plainfield — Communications received from Mr. and Mrs. Blake Parks of Mount Pleasant, Tyendinaga, who left Belleville at 8 A.M. on Tuesday, April 3rd, state that they reached Regina in Saskatchewan, a distance of 2145 miles, via Detroit and Chicago, at 1 P. M. on Saturday, April 8th. They state that the roads were real good and that on Friday, April 7th, their party travelled 640 miles without any special effort. The nights were spent in cabins along the way where they report the accommodation all that could be desired.

THREE ENGLISH FLIERS KILLED

London, Apr. 29 (CP-Havas) — Three Royal Air Force flyers were killed yesterday in two plane crashes bringing the total of such accidents this year to 49, with 86 dead.

One of the craft lost speed over a military field at Hawkinge, near Folkestone, Kent, and fell in flames. The two occupants—Flying Officer Ronald Anthony, George Petrie and Pte. Henry Arthur John Stacy—were burned to death.

destroyed" all hopes of peaceful co-operation.

At the same time the Polish War Ministry set in motion a series of precautionary measures, especially near Danzig. Most of the measures were not disclosed, but Poland already had 1,300,000 men under arms.

Demonstrations Scheduled

The army scheduled demonstrations of air strength over all cities for Sunday. Polish citizens then will have an opportunity to view fast bombers and pursuit planes never exhibited in Poland before, and of the type which, the army said, would raid Germany in the event of conflict.

The tone of the press emphasized the firmness of Poland's attitude expressed by a Foreign Office spokesman that attempts to put pressure on Poland would be answered "promptly and in the same manner" The independent newspaper Kurjer Polski said:

"Hitler's speech was a speech of a man burning all his bridges — bridges that would have permitted Germany to avoid throwing herself over the precipice of war.

"The one-sided denunciation of the naval treaty (the 1935 Anglo-German naval pact) was accompanied by demands for colonies, brutal rejection of the hand bringing peace from across the sea (President Roosevelt's), and the burning of the bridge uniting Poland and Germany in the form of a non-aggression pact—these were the elements of the speech."

Poland Will Not Agree

The paper said Germany demanded Danzig and "our sovereignty over part" of the Polish Corridor as his price for resuming the non-aggression treaty and that "not a single Pole will agree" to such a price.

"We will never exchange our rights for a worthless scrap of paper," the paper said.

The Nationalistic Warzawski Dziennik Narodowy, in an inspired editorial, said: "Poland has nothing to give Germany. In no case will we give up our firm decision to defend our rights in Danzig and the integrity of Pomorze (Polish Corridor). Hitler's denunciation of the non-aggression pact will only contribute to dispersing the illusion among the few Poles who believed in the possibility of an understanding with Germany."

Preparing For Worst

It was declared the Polish-German 10-year non-aggression treaty of 1934 had long been the keystone of Hitler's foreign policy—never to be forced to face enemies on both his eastern and western frontiers. For this reason Polish officials took a grave view of the situation. Some observers expressed the belief that in burning this bridge Hitler was "preparing for the worst."

Further improvement of Poland's relations with Russia on her eastern frontier was expected to follow. There was some speculation regarding the possibility of Foreign Minister Joseph Beck visiting Moscow, where Great Britain has been pressing diplomatic efforts to bring the Soviet into collaboration with her bloc of nations ranged against Germany and Italy. Poland's attitude toward Soviet collaboration has been a key feature in those negotiations because of Polish fears of accepting Red Army aid.

OTTAWA UNEMPLOYED STAGE DEMONSTRATION

More than 100 homeless unemployed men took part in a demonstration in Ottawa after waiting in vain for a reply to a wire sent by Mayor Lewis to Hon. Eric Cross, Ontario minister of public welfare, requesting that something be done for the men. Marching through the streets the men staged "sitdown" strikes in front of Ottawa's civic offices.

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Apr. 29 (CP) — Stocks drifted to a slightly lower price range on the Toronto Exchange in the final session of the week. Trading was active in a few of the cheaper golds, notably Augite, while senior issues of both mining and industrial groups were dull and irregular. Turnover was about 225,000 shares.

Augite moved up to 55 cents for a gain of 2 to 3 cents. Lamaque was strong and minor gains were netted by Pickle Crow, East Malartic, McKenzie Red Lake and Hollinger. Dome and Lake Shore declined about ¾ of a point and O'Brien dropped 20 cents.

Narrow recessions predominated in the Base Metal group. Noranda eased down a point in slow action and Smelters and Nickel weakened small fractions.

The Walker stocks lost ⅛ to ½ and other interlisted leaders were narrowly irregular. Brazilian, B. A. Oil and Fanny Farmer were down ⅛ to ⅜.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Apr. 29 (AP)—Buying or selling incentives were scarpe in today's stock market and leading issues generally stumbled over a slightly irregular route.

Scattered recoveries were in evidence at the close, with steels and motors coming back for modest advances, but minus signs were also plentiful. Transfers approximated 175,000 shares.

Inclined to revive at the Finish were General Motors, Chrysler, U.S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward, Consolidated Edison, Sante Fe, Union Carbide, Allied Chemical and Eastman Kodak.

In difficulties most of the time were American Telephone, International Nickel, General Electric, Westinghouse, Spedry, Goodyear and Du Pont.

Dropping back narrowly in the Canadian section were McIntyre Porcupine, Hiram Walker and C.P.R. Dominion 4s were a trifle higher.

Hog Pasture Should be Close to Shelter

No hog pasture is complete that is not accessible to shelters. In the early spring and late fall, pigs require shelter in a building that is dry and sufficiently well made to prevent draughts.

Pigs also require shade. While the direct rays of the sun are necessary in the natural development of a pig, yet too much exposure to the sun may be a disadvantage. A young pig that is badly sumburned receives a serious setback.

BROILERS OFFERED ON MART TODAY

First of the Season—Quality Birds Sell at Dollar a Pair

Tasty young broilers, making their seasonal debut, the fresh greens of new lettuce, cabbage and onion plants, and succulent trout and whitefish fresh from the waters of ake and bay, gave the city market a colorful Spring touch today. Squealing shoats in what is said to be a record number, added a seasonal symphony to an offering of produce that displayed plenty of variety to a typical Saturday morning crowd of shoppers.

Price tones remained fairly steady in comparison to those of a week ago. Egg prices showed a slight increase with extra "A" selects selling at 25c per dozen with slightly inferior qualities selling at a cent or two less. Mediums were offered at 22c and 23c per dozen.

Young broilers, said to be the first of the marketing season, attracted lovers of chicken. The young birds, however, ranged in weight and price, with small varities selling at 55c per pair and choice, weighty youngsters offered at $1.00. Yearlings showed little change in price with nice birds offered at from $1.00 to as high as $1.20. Fowl and other varieties were quoted at from 55c each.

Maple syrup in rapidly decreasing quantities failed to maintain the expected rise in price and what few vendors offered their products for sale asked $1.50 per gallon with quarts offered at 50c. Maple sugar sold at six small cakes for 25c.

One of the largest quantities of potatoes seen on the market for some time was apparent today, with prices ranging from $1.25 to $1.50 for ninety pound bags. Quality appeared to be very good, and business was fairly brisk during the early hours.

Vegetable Shoots Offered

New cabbage and onion shoots together with fresh new lettuce attracted gardeners of the city. In flats containing 100 plans cabbage was offered at 75c; lettuce at 60c and onions at 70c. New bunch lettuce and radishes together with hothouse rhubarb sold well at 5c a bunch.

Staple vegetables, such as parsnips, carrots, beets and turnips, specially groomed for a new Spring showing, moved slowly at prevailing prices of 50c per bushel. Onions demanded a few cents more.

Northern Spies and Stark Delicious apples headed the Winter fruit display with the former selling at $1.50 per hamper lot and an extra fine variety of the latter demanding $2.00 for the same quantity. Slightly inferior qualities were offered at 25c less with some cooking apples selling at from 80c to $1.00 per bushel.

Fresh lake trout and whitefish formed an added attraction to marketers with the former selling at 25c per pound and the latter at 23c. Mudcats were offered at 2 pounds for 25c; while fresh mullets or "suckers" moved briskly at four for 25c.

Six-weeks' old pigs were plentiful with prices ranging from $5.50 to $6.00 each. Transactions however were sluggish during the early hours.

NO FARM INSPECTORS TO BE HIRED THIS YEAR BY C.O.C. ASSOC.

No farm inspectors will be hired this year as requested in a resolution by the Central Ontario Cheesemakers' Association, it was announced at a meeting of the provincial directors of the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association held in Kingston yesterday.

The meeting, held in the LaSalle Hotel, was presided over by R. H. Mayberry, president of the provincial group, and Charles Fraleigh, Bloomfield, acted as secretary in the absence of S. L. Joss of Belleville, at present in the British Isles.

The basis of the new constitution was discussed, and an agreement was reached on all points. During the afternoon members were given an address by Prof. H. S. Arkell, special marketing investigator for the Dominion.

Toronto Egg Prices Slightly Easier

Toronto, April 22—Further price shading occurred in graded egg prices on the Toronto open produce market yesterday but butter remained at former levels, according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Trading generally leaned toward the quiet side on the egg market, although one source reported some improvement in demand from the previous day. Prices in the graded division eased slightly on top grades, but other sections of the market were unchanged. Graded shipments closed at 20½c for grade A-large, 19c for medium and 18c for pullet, B and C grades.

The butter market maintained a steady tone, with a steady movement of offerings reported. Fresh receipts were not arriving in heavy volume, and supplies of 38 score were light. Sellers still experienced difficulty in obtaining 21c for first grade Ontario product, resulting in most sales being recorded at ¼c below this level. Ontario creamery solids ranged at 20¾c to 21c for No. 1 grades and 20c to 20½c for 38 score.

Quebec Butter Firms

Montreal, April 29 — Creamery butter eased while Quebec pasteurized butter strengthened fractionally on open produce markets yesterday, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Creamery butter prints to retailers sold for 22-22¼c a pound and solids for 21½-21¾c.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold at 21½-22c a dozen for A-large, 20c for A-medium, 19c for A-pullets, 19-19½c for B-large and 18c for C. Receipts, 2451 cases.

3. His statement—"No one would be happier than I at the prospect of still being able to come to a clear and straight-forward understanding" on armaments with Britain.

4. His denunciation of the Anglo-German Naval Treaty of 1935 limiting the Reich's fleet to 35 per cent of Britain's.

His suggestion of negotiations for a new treaty was reliably reported to have been rejected already by the foreign office.

Official Comment Lacking.

Official comment on the speech as a whole was lacking, with Prime Minister Chamberlain retired to his country home at Chequers to study the 18,000-word address.

Winston Churchill in a speech last night said Britain would not abandon her part in the "conflict for individual liberty and public law which is now open" despite several passages in Hitler's speech which seemed designed to induce her to "withdraw from the part she has pledged herself to play n eastern Europe."

Cautious Attitude.

The press generally accepted a cautious attitude, asserting that deeds, not words, count. Particular significance was attached to Germany's denunciation of her non-aggression treaty with Poland. Excerpts from provincial newspapers follow:

Press Comment.

Sheffield Telegraph (Conservative)—"Hitler boasts he has achieved his aims so far without bloodshed. None will be shed now if he does not menace the lives and homes of non-German states. His deeds will decide the pace of Europe. His speeches no longer frighten the world."

Nottingham Guardian (Conservative)—"Recent changes in British policy have presented Hitler with a new situation which gives him pause. He appears to be temporizing."

Nottingham Journal (Liberal) —"There are most taunting and jeering references all through the speech to United States history and to her sense of moral responsibility as a big partner in the preservation of peace and democracy. The reaction of American opinion is likely to be quick and indignant."

Western Mail, Cardiff (Conservative)—"Before attaching importance to Hitler's apparent moderation the world will want some tangible evidence that his speech was not a clever subterfuge."

Newcastle Daily Journal (Conservative)—"For the past ten days the peoples of the earth have been living in a kind of no man's land. A peace that is no peace has been their lot. The speech has been delivered, and as far as we can observe the world must still go on living in that no man's land of uncertainty."

Western Daily Press, Bristol (Independent)—"Taken altogether, Hitler's speech in the Reichstag yesterday was less intransigent and menacing than many had feared would be the case."

Sussex Daily News, Brighton (Independent)—The concensus of all that was said yesterday leads to the conclusion that the German dictator has no desire to be involved in a war with powers comparable to his country and his country's allies."

North Mail, Newcastle (Independent)—"The tone of the speech was impressively conciliatory. It pushed open a little further the door to negotiations."

Yorkshire Observer, Bradford (Liberal)—"There can be no wavering in British diplomacy or defence."

Leeds Murcury (Conservative)—"The speech is largely moderate in tone, but says in effect: 'I am ready to promise not to attack any state which gives me what I ask.' That is not good to us. It is in fact a danger signal."

Birmingham Gazette (Liberal)—"By tearing up the 1934 peace treaty with Poland by offering safety to thirty little nations only so long as they bring 'proper proposals' Hitler has provided President Roosevelt with something more concrete than words in rejecting his peace and conference appeal."

Western Morning News, Pymouth (Independent)—"There was not passag in it from beginning to end to relieve the anxiety expressed by Roosevelt or cause any free peoples to slacken their defensive efforts."

Northern Echo, Darlington (Independent)—"The problem of Danzig and the development of the familiar Nazi technique towards Poland's refusal to accept Hitler's present terms may keep Europe on tenderhooks for months."

Eastern Daily Press, Norwich (Liberal): "Denunciation of the Polish agreement was an extremely astute move. What would be the position if Germany attempted to enforce her claim by arms as she now takes the right to do? Resistance by Poland would place on Great Britain and France the necessity of deciding whether this was an act clearly threatening the independence of the country within the terms of the pledge."

Dundee Courier and Advertiser (Independent): "The practical inferences to be drawn are that the Nazi power realizes that further aggression means war and that for the moment it is not prepared to make the venture."

Irish Independent, Dublin (Independent): "In the Fuehrer's speech all hangs on the hypothesis that he is not lulling the world into a false sense of securtiy before the carrying out of another dramatic coup."

Irish Times, Dublin (Conservative): "If Germany should try to repeat the Memel tactics in Danzig there almost certainly will be serious trouble, possibly establishing a casus foederis which would involve Great Britain."

HAROLD QUINCEY FRACTURES HAND

Crushed Between Mill and Truck and Taken to Hospital

Harold Quincey, 372 Coleman St., was rushed to Belleville General Hospital yesterday afternoon suffering with a fractured right hand and badly crushed hips as a result of an accident that occurred when a truck driven by James A. Weese, Carrying Place, crushed him against the wall of a grist mill at the corner of Harriet and Coleman Streets.

An X-ray taken at the hospital last night by Dr. G. H. Stobie revealed no bones broken in the vicinity of the hips, and today Quincey's condition was said to be good.

The injured man was standing against a plank that juts out from the south side of the mill, when the truck approached. In a statement given to Sergeant Arthur Harman, investigating police officer, Weese said that he thought he had plenty of room to pass Quincey, but apparently he was too close to the plank. The front end of the truck caught Quincey about the waist crushing him against the edge of the plank and turning him halfway around before it could be stopped.

Quincey fell to the ground. Weese and two men who were in the vicinity picked him up and placed him in the cab of the truck. He refused medical aid, but due to his condition, Weese called police and Dr. Stobie. The latter ordered the injured man to the hospital, where he was taken by the police car under Sergt. Harman's supervision.

Citizens, Constable Try to Console Lost Child

Four Year Old Boy Creates Scene on Front Street Until Mother Comes to Aid

Loud screams heard on Friday morning on Front Street by pedestrians and persons in automobiles threw a temporary scare into them as they mirrored in their mind's eye some dire event.

City Police Constable William Evans was among those whose ears caught the sounds and proceeded to the source of the uproar, on the east side of Front Street opposite the footbridge gangway, but some distance south.

It was difficult to believe but it was a four year old boy who was causing it all. Persons nearby went to him to learn the cause of the trouble and found not that he was injured but that an event which is all too common in childhood had happened—he had lost his mother. The little fellow, too young and too wise to accept a substitute for her, continued the wails and rejected every offer of consolation from the kindly audience which gathered about him. Then the little fellow was approached by the police constable, who tried and did make some impression upon the boy. Still he remained the centre of attraction. He was unconsoled.

Meanwhile the anxious mother was looking for the strayed young son. She found her way up Front Street and soon there was a happy reunion for the terrified child and the alarmed mother.

The child had strayed from a party of tourists for a moment and missing them, had thought his mother had gone up Front Street. So he travelled north. She had entered a shop not far from Bridge Street for a purchase and so the youngster had travelled a considerable distance in the quest of his mother before he gave himself up for lost and expressed his fear and fright in the screams to which he gave expression.

The tourists were from Toronto.

George C. Shorey Retires From R. R. Service Today

Has Spent Forty-One Years With G.T.R. and C.N.R. Systems

Forty-one years of faithful efficient service with the Canadian National Railways reaches its culmination today when Mr. George C. Shorey, 29 Forin Street lays down his tools for the last time in his capacity as yardman with that company.

By the same token, Mr. Shorey celebrates the sixty-fifth anniversary of his birth, and tonight will start the enjoyment of well-merited rest from a career that has been unmarred with any untoward incident down through the years.

It was away back in 1891 when the seventeen year old youth applied for and got a job as brakeman on the old Grand Trunk Railway at the Toronto terminal. Application and initiative soon gained for him well-deserved promotion and 1902 found him in Lindsay. In 1907 he was promoted to a freight conductor, a position he filled efficiently until 1911.

Then sickness overtook Mr. Shorey and he was compelled to retire from active work for a period of five years. Resuming his position in 1916 he was transferred to Belleville where he served in his present capacity until the time of his retirement.

Mr. Shorey will avail himself of the opportunity to travel on the road he served so well during his period of retirement.

PORTSMOUTH

Capitalizing on their success, Portsmouth went away on the resumption, C. Parker putting his team three up after a minute's play. He dashed in to tap the ball in the net after R. A. Scott in the opposing goal had only partially saved from Barlow. A few minutes later T. Dorsett notched Wolverhampton's only tally from a breakaway. Parker completed scoring after 72 minutes. The outside left ran in to score from an accurate pass from F. Worrall.

Went to Royal Box

Following the match the winning team went to the Royal Box where cup and medals were presented by the King and Queen. Their Majesties joined heartily in cheering both winners and the vanquished Wolves.

Forty special trains steamed into the capital bringing thousands to watch the final from the Midlands and the north, 36 were run from the west and Wales while the usual frequent service from Portsmouth and Southern England was supplemented by eleven specials.

A. & N. VETERANS TO GUARD CROSSINGS

Selected members of the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada, Belleville branch No. 201 will guard railway crossings in the city for a period of two hours on Sunday May 21st when the train carrying Their Majesties will pass through the city, according to President James Lazenby.

Notices asking for volunteers for this important duty have been posted in the clubrooms, and President Lazenby expects the quota will be filled long before the time for duty arrives.

'Old-Timer' Thinks Present Late Season Favorable for Crops

That at least is the opinion of the grizzled old-timer who has seen some seventy-nine Springs come and go.

Chewing more or less emphatically on a generous cud of tobacco this morning while a keen pair of eyes swept over the produce on the city market, he cocked a quizzical eye to the heavens where a brilliant April sun radiated warm rays, indicative of real Spring weather.

"Listen to 'em howl about the lateness of the Spring—no seedin' done—the maple syrup a failure and all that stuff," he grinned.

"Why the majority of folks don't realize what a remarkable Spring we are havin'", and a brown stream of tobacco juice squirted accurately in a crack in the pavement.

"Do you know" he said, "that this here Spring differs a lot to any that even I can remember. The snow remained on the ground late, and as a result it pulled the frost out of the ground in a hurry, when it did start to come. On top of that we have had no killin' frosts to damage fall wheat and other winter grains. This is a good sign that Spring crops should do well. I must admit the ground is cold and in many parts very wet, but all in all, that will disappear and you will see some fine crops about yet although they will be somewhat later than last year."

"Now there's a year that spoiled everybody. Everything was from ten days to two weeks ahead of natural maturity, and folks somehow have got the idea that all Springs should be the same. Ask 'em and they will tell you, especially the oldtimers, that many a late Spring has been the forerunner of good crops, and I mean durned good ones too', he smiled.

HAPPY ABOUT THE WHOLE THING

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and his bride, the former Mrs. Mary Lee Hartford, are going to lead a happy married life, if the smile they wore immediately following their marriage in Beverly Hills, Calif., is any criterion of their future happiness. Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., acted as best man, while the bride was given in marriage by her mother.

SPRING CHAPEAUX IN THE BRITISH ARMY

Their steel helmets covered with burlap and becomingly trimmed with sprigs of gorse, these members of the British army's signal corps may be unwittingly setting a new style for women's chapeaux. They were pictured during the recent defence exercises held at Aldershot for the benefit of the King and Queen. The gorse is not for decorative purposes, but to camouflage the men from the prying eyes of "hostile" airmen.

MOIRA RIVER GOES ON RAMPAGE NEAR BELLEVILLE

Modern, low-slung automobiles were of little use in navigating this stretch of road near Highway No. 14, at Belleville, Ont., after the Moira river poured over its banks and flooded more than two feet of water over adjacent farms. The team of horses, plodding steadily along, was about the only means of transportation that was able to navigate the flooded roadway.

Business Women

By LOYOLA DUFFEY

Marilyn thought being a "business woman" was simply wonderful. For almost a year she had sipped the wild esence of freedom, and the intoxication still lingered. Every Friday there was a crisp roll of bills—16 in all—and all hers. She used it to satisfy all the supressed desires of her beauty-loving little soul; Gossamer stockings, exotic jewelry, and clothes—the last word on the last page of next month's fashion magazine.

Life for Marilyn was indeed a song, a synocopating jazz tune, but for two minor discords. One was the fact that her boy friends were mostly students or junior clerks making little more than herself, and the other was Aunt Carrie.

Aunt Carrie was also a "business woman," one of the old girls. She was past thirty and addicted to blue tailored frocks with touches of white at the neck and wrists.

Marilyn never forgot the night that she had danced gaily into the living room wearing her new ensemble, black with trimmings of lip-stick red. There was antique jewelry to match and a tight little cloche with drooping red feather. Aunt Carrie had lain back and actually howled.

"Do you intend to wear that costume to a business office, Marilyn?"

"I most certainly do. I only hope that it makes everyone as happy as it apparently does you."

Aunt Carrie made for the door. "It wasn't that. I—I just thought of something f—f—funny."

"Mother, do I have to put up with that sort of thing? Do I have to work hard all day and come home to be insulted by hysterical old maids? If I do, I'm through. I'll stay in town—get an apartment."

A few days later a perfectly marvelous thing happened. It put Aunt Carrie and her little "jokes" entirely out of Marilyn's head. She was hurrying to the office, when she heard a voice. "Hi, Miss M-rgan! Want a lift to the subway?" It was Mr. Nelson, branch manager, over forty, and idol of all the typists.

Her heart skipped a beat as she jumped into the long shining car. "I think it's just wonderful of you to give me a lift." Marilyn's mascaraed eyelashes fluttered softly. If only he would invite her to dinner at one of those swell places that had dancing and cabaret.

"How would you like to have a little bite with me?"

Her heart skipped two beats. "Oh, wouldn't it be fun!"

He took her to a quaint littl downstairs place that advertise "home cooking." Marilyn was dis appointed, but brightened ove their dinner cigarettes, for Mr. Ne son said: "I'll have to take you t one of those high-hat places whe they give you little food, but plen of atmosphere."

Marilyn's head was whirling. A ready she could see dances a theatres, and in the dim distar a sweet young thing throwing bouquet from the deck of a gr ocean liner. A honeymoon in Eu ope, of course.

"Mother, this is Mr. Nelson, from the office."

Her mother invited him inside, and, to Marilyn's surprise, he accepted. The papers were spread all over the living room floor and the airedale snored in the only comfortable armchair. It was terrible. Mr. Nelson and Aunt Carrie became excited over the election, but Marilyn gazed depectedly out of the window, wondering why there wasn't a law to execute all "old maids." Later, Aunt Carrie played "Kitten on the Keys," and her mother served coffee

Mr. Nelson kept his promise and invited Marilyn to the ritziest dancing place in town. He also took her and Aunt Carrie to the new revue, and the following Sunday he invited the whole family to ride. Marilyn was puzzled but finally decided that he had old-fashioned ideas about young girls being chaperoned.

While he was away on a business rtip Marilyn played around with Bob Evans. Bob strummed a wicked ukulele and took one upstairs at the movies.

"No, honey boy, I can't make any more dates this week. I'm thinking of taking some night courses. Toodley-ooh."

She opened the hall door. Aunt Carrie was standing there, and in the shadows there was a man.

"Why, wh-, Mr. Nelson?"

He put his arm about her, laughing rather foolishly. For a moment she thought he had been drinking, and then she became conscious of a terrible thing; his other arm was around Aunt Carrie.

In the solitude of her little cretonned room she fought her battle. It was not the fact that Mr. Nelson was to marry Aunt Carrie; it was the devastating knowledge that he had PREFERRED Aunt Carrie.

Never again would life be a syncopating jazz tune. It was dead serious this business of being a business woman.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating dinner, being chicken and stuffing, and I yelled, Hurrah for me, good luck I've got the wishbone.

Well you dont need to bring the house down from the rooftops, ma said, and I said, I'm not, ma, who wants to make a wish with me? and pop said, I'll hook on to one end.

No, let me, ma said. To be candidly frank, Willyum, I always have believed in the power of wishbones. That's one superstition that simply must have something to it, no matter how little, or why should so many people have such a proverbial belief in it? I'll take one end, Benny, she said.

Wich she did, and we both began to start to pull, and I said, Wait a minute, ma, wait a second.

What's a matter, you've had plenty of time to make a wish, ma said, and I said, I know, ma, but I'm changing it, okay, ma, its changed.

Then keep the change because I'm not going to stop pulling again, ma said.

Wich she didn't and the wishbone broke and the longest half stayed with me, ma saying, O shaw, and after a while I said, Can I have some more stuffing; ma?

Certainly not, you've had 3 helpings, ma said, and I said, G, ma, you have to say Yes.

What do you mean by such a disobedient statement? ma said, and I said, I mean if you dont say Yes you'll have to go through the rest of your life not believing in wishbones, because I wished you'd give me some more stuffing.

Wich ma did, saying, Such an idea, O well, what's a little more or less to a growing boy? and pop said, Benny, did you really make that wish or are you a modern Mackiavelli? and I said, Who, pop? and he said, Never mind, I dont have to know everything, I might get conceeted, so dont tell me.

Wich I didn't.

AT THE BELLE

"You Can't Cheat an Honest Man"

Edgar Bergen found the gates to Fame one night in Chicago night Club.

The next night he kicked those gates wide open. Then, accompanied by his side kick and principal annoyer, Charlie McCarthy, he started his triumphant march to the capital of that elusive land known as fame.

The rise of Bergen and McCarthy has been swift and true. When they seemed to have startled onlookers by soaring still higher. This is especially true of their film career in which they reach new heights with W. C. Fields in Universal's "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man", which is now on the Belle screen.

Star is Born

McCarthy, as everyone knows, has been an important factor in Bergen's success story. However, the story began while Charlie was still a stalwart pine tree in a Michigan forest. He really was "born" to get Bergen out of a tough spot. And he has been getting him in and out of hot water ever since.

It all happened at a school party in Bergen's home town, Chicago, when he still was known as Eddie Bergen. Only a few weeks before he had learned the trick of "Throwing his voice". He thought it would be a good idea to see if he could fool the gang at the party. One of the boys had just finished playing a new tune when an unexpected finale came from the inside of the piano, "That may sound good to you guys out there, but it's terrible in here".

Everyone was stunned into absolute silence for a moment. Then came a scramble to find out where the voice was coming from. The piano was demolished. Eddie's trick was discovered and an irate mother informed him he would have to pay the repair bill.

And so Charlie McCarthy was born. First Bergen and McCarthy appeared in neighborhood theatres. Then Charlie changed his original baseball uniform for snappy college clothes and they started touring in vaudeville. That died. So Charlie again changed his costume to his now familiar tails, top hat and monocle and accompanied Bergen into night spots.

The rest is history. Rudy Vallee heard him and offered him a guest spot on his radio program.

A few months later an entirely new program was being built around Bergen and McCarthy. This show jumped into first place immediately and it's still there.

Hollywood Mowed Down

Then came a flood of movie offers. After appearing in the "Goldwyn-Follies", Bergen signed a long term contract with Universal. His first picture under that agreement was "Letter of Introduction". His second, and greatest to date, is "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man".

W. C. Fields is starred in this film with Bergen and McCarthy. Included in the supporting cast are a host of well known names, such as Mortimer Snerd, Constance Moore, Mary Forbes, Thurston Hall, Princess Baba, John Arledge Charles Coleman, Edward Brophy, Arthur Hohl, Blacman and Eddie Anderson.

"Music and Models, is the title of a multiple-reel musical comedy to be presented on the same program with the Belle latest world news events, and a clever comicolor cartoon 'Society Dog Show'.

Belleville and vicinity screen lovers will be pleased to hear the following screen attractions have been booked to the Belle Theatre duding the month of May. "The Mikado", in technicolor, Deanne Durbin in "Three Smart Girls Grow Up". Nelson Eddy in "Let Freedom Ring", the 6th of the Hardy Family series The Hardy's Ride High", "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and coinciding with the visit of Their Majesties to Canada in May, Anna Neagle, Anton Walbrook are appearing in their latest picture "Sixty Glorious Years".

AT THE McCARTHY

"Never Say Die"

A carnival of clowning, with those two unmatched screen comedians, Bob Hope and Martha Raye holding the centre of the ring, will be presented next at the McCarthy Theatre in their new comedy, "Never Say Die."

Heralded by critics everywhere, as the best comedy-feature these two likeable fun-makers have as yet been able to confine their efforts into making—the following is a few off-hand examples taken from published reviews, "the punch laugh hit of the spring season—chalk up another hit for Martha Raye and Bob Hope," says Jimmie Fidler; "Sure fire for laughs," says Motion Picture Daily; "A procession of hilarious reviews made on "Never Say Die" and the management of the McCarthy Theatre would like to also mention that Belleville has been chosen as one of the first spots for its premiere showings. In addition to Martha Raye and Bob Hope in the starring roles, Andy Devine, Alan Mowbray, Gale Sondergaard and the new comedian sensation Ernest Cossart have excellent supporting parts.

"Juvenile Court"

Presented as a companion feature on the same program "Juvenile Court," with Paul Kelly, Rita Hayworth and Frankie Darro and his gang, will also be presented at the McCarthy Theatre. Plenty of action, drama that chokes your laughter with sobs and a story that might be your own life-like manner of dealing with those that never really have had much chance in the world, forms the background of "Juvenile Court" which is said to be one of the best entertainment hits of this season, that we urge you to see. "Play Ball" an excellent sport subject that is extremely timely and interesting to all lovers of this type of fine sport is also presented with the above two feature attractions which open next at the McCarthy Theatre.

"Law of the Underworld"
"Painted Desert"

Chester Morris and Anne Shirley in "Law of the Underworld" also George O'Brien in "Painted Desert" plus a Walt Disney all technicolor cartoon entitled "Plunto's Quintuplets" and another chapter of "Flying G-Men" will be shown for the last times at the McCarthy Theatre and for exciting dramatic entertainment, combined into an eveninig of pleasing screen attractions all will find an ideal programme at the McCarthy Theatre.

Plainfield

While grading the highway, on Monday, with the Provincial machine, Mr. Carleton Cronkright, the operator became stuck several times when the soft shoulders gave way.

While on his way to market with a load of fat hogs, Mr. James McCreary had one jump over the truck rack onto the road in front of the United Church and break a hind leg. Neighbors helped reload the frisky animal and soon the truck driven by Mr. Harry McCreary was on its way again.

His many friends in this community will be glad to learn that Mr. Addison Hall of Toronto, who had his left hand badly lacerated ten days ago in a saw which he was sharpening in the factory where he is employed was not so seriously injured as was at first feared and that he is improving favorably. He will be confined to the hospital for a considerable time yet.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry McCreary and Garth spent Sunday afternoon with friends in Tweed.

Miss Verna Prindle has accepted a position with friends at Corbyville.

many friends around Plainfield is extended to Mrs. J. Frank Treverton in the death of her father, the late Dan Charles Hyde of Belleville who passed away in the General Hospital on Wednesday.

Trenton

Trenton, April 29 (Special)—William Davis, middle aged ex-convict, who makes Trenton a port-of-call occasionally will call here no more for some time as a result of the two-year sentence tacked on him by Magistrate E. J. Butler of Belleville in Friday's court. The sentence came as a result of the man's plea of guilty to a charge, that he stole two watches from Fletcher Deline of College St., a blind man who harboured him for a night. According to the information Deline occasionally used to open his home to Davis for a night's lodging, and on this most recent occasion he missed the watches the next day. Davis will accordingly go back to Kingston for two more years, but it will be almost like a homecoming for him for he has spent eight years there already on three convictions.

The court session was not featured by any other very stirring business, but a whole host of "failing to "produce" cases were aired as a result of the recent police activities in checking motoriste on the highways. Most of those convicted paid by letter; a few appeared to pay the usual fine of two dollars with costs of a similar amount added.

A young R.C.A.F. officer, accused of reckless driving, appeared in his own defence;and when a police officer and three witnesses swore, that he travelled along No. 2 highway at speeds of 70 to 75 miles per hour and in town between 45 and 50 he questioned the testimony. One witness swore that he had to swerve his car to the curb to avoid a collision as the accused cut in in front of him. He was found guilty on the evidence and was fined ten dollars with costs of $17.00 and had his driver's licence suspended for ten days.

A local young man, charged with vagrancy, said he "guessed" he was guilty, and was taken to Belleville in custody for a week, during which time he will receive a mental examination.

Among the cases of those "failing to produce" driver's licences, there were two rather curious cases. The first concerned a man who wrote in submitting evidence that he had been issued a permit, but just previous to being stopped by the officer had had his pocket picked in a large city and had thus lost not only his permit but a quantity of money and a marked cheque for over seven hundred dollars. The court decided this was too much tough luck for one man so dropped the charge. Another man, a commercial traveller, had changed clothes and had left his permit in a suit which he had stowed away in the rear of his car. Stopped by the officer he offered to dig it out from among all his samples but was told it would not be necessary. A delay was decided upon by the court to check this story with the officer concerned.

Workmen putting the swing portion of the Trent river bridge in in condition on Friday swung it part open during the forenoon, and may curious townfolk rushed to see the first boat of the season pass through. However they were disappointed when they found that the move was only a part of the work, and traffic was held up for moments only.

A vagrant current of wind caught an unfortunate parachute jumper at the R.C.A.F. station on Thursday and brought him across the highway toward the bay and finally dumped him among the branches of a small orchard between the barracks and the married quarters just south of the road. He was unhurt, fortunately, and the rescue squad were on hand to extricate him and the 'chute almost as soon as he arrived.

Increasing activity is more than evident these days at the Air Station as officers and airmen prepare for their share of the ceremonial duties in connection with the Royal visit to Canada next month. Members of the band have been informed that they will probably have to be present at such places as Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Port Hope, Niagara Falls, and perhaps others as well. The greater portion of the airmen will parade and will line the streets at Kingston and at Toronto and a special group of about one hundred have been chosen as the guard of honour which will escort Their Majesties in Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto and other Canadian cities. On Friday several high officials were on hand from Ottawa, among whom it was rumoured that Air Commodore G. M. Croil was one. It is interesting to note that the band has been enlarged to a strength of about sixty members, and that these are now being led by acting-drum major Corporal R. M. "Tiny" Davis, whose six-feet-four of stature certainly make him an outstanding figure in any parade.

Several cases of scarlet fever breaking out among children of R.C.A.F. families resident at the Airport have occasioned the removal from both public and high schools of all R.C.A.F. children who have been coming in to school via R.C.A.F. trucks for some days. No further outbreaks have been reported to date, but all these youngsters are being placed under observation for the time being. A few cases are reported in Trenton, and a few anxious parents have gone to the extent of having their children inoculated.

The fire department had a short short run to a fruit store at the intersection of Dundas and Murphy streets early Thursday evening, but no damage was reported and the trouble was found to be mostly in stovepipes.

Trenton council met on Friday evening for the regular session for the month of April.

Two members of the Ontario Municipal Board were in Trenton on Thursday to investigate further the situation that has arisen as a result of controversy between the town and Clare Northey, undertaker, whose effort to utilize his home on Dundas Street West brought a protest from citizens who said that it was a "preferred area." The hearing was somewhat lengthy, and after evidence had been offered by both sides the two members left for Toronto, reserving their decision for a few days.

Softball officials and team managers met in the office of secretary Art Black on Friday evening to receive team entries and to make further plans for action. Closing date for entries was originally set at May 1st but was later stepped up to Friday, April 28th, and it appears all settled that the same four teams as last season will comprise the league. According to present plans the loop will begin operations on or about Monday, May 15th, when R.C.A.F. last year's champs, will meet Yourex Billiards, runners-up.

The King's Grandfather Marvels at Niagara

When a certain handsome young lad of 19 visited Niagara Falls one Saturday in September, 1860, a "grand experiment of lighting the Falls" was tried in his honour. "Grand indeed it was", exclaimed a chronicler, "who shall describe it? Some 80 Bengal lights placed below the plateau on which we were standing and hidden from our view, brilliantly illuminated both Falls which stood out in high relief—oceans of white foam, while the surrounding framework of the picture was in blackest night!"

The young man was H.R.H. Albert Edward, first Prince of Wales to visit Canada, sent on a tour of good will by his far-seeing mother Victoria the Good.

Thirteen years before this, an "experiment" of another nature took place—the launching of Canada's first life assurance company, the Canada Life. In a history of 92 years it has paid to or accumulated for its policyholders and beneficiaries more than $650,000,000—over $50,000,000 more than it has received in premiums,

SHARP REBUFF TO ROOSEVELT BY NAZI PRESS

Some Call it "Political Execution" for the President

'DOOR NOT SHUT'

Berlin, April 29—(AP)—Germany through her closely-controlled press, strongly assailed President Roosevelt today, underscored demands for Danzig and colonies and differed on how far Chancellor Hitler had closed the door to peaceful negotiation.

One newspaper, the influential Boersenzeitung of Berlin, suggested that Mr. Roosevelt resign because of the "great number of historical untruths, political mistakes and plain absurdities" that Hitler "proved" yesterday as existing in the President's peace proposal, to which the Fuehrer replied before the Reichstag.

In his speech rejecting Mr. Roosevelt's request for German-Italian non-aggression pledges, Hitler scrapped the 1935 naval agreement with Great Britain and the 1934 10-year non-aggression pact with Poland.

A Sharp Rebuff

Even well-instructed Nazi commentators differed on the breadth of the Chancellor's answer to Mr. Roosevelt's appeal of April 15, but all agreed it was at least a sharp rebuff and some called it a "political execution" for Roosevelt.

The reaction in the Free City of Danzig was immediate to Hitler's reference to that former German Baltic city as an open question which sooner or later "naturally had to be solved" and his statement that "it should be beyond all doubt that Danzig will never become Polish."

Nazis in Danzig, which since the great war has been connected with the Polish customs administration, began to speculate on the day of their "return to the Reich."

Door Not Shut

Several newspapers with foreign circulations expressed the opinion that the door was not shut to further negotiations, but in the main the newspapers of primarily domestic distribution ignored the possibility of negotiations and concentrated on angry denunciations of Roosevelt.

The Fremdenblatt of Hamburg, for example, said: "He (Hitler) has in no way slammed the door against negotiations but he requires as a precondition respect and confidence in Germany from England."

Hitler's paper, Voelkischer Beobachter, in a front-page headline underlined in red said that "the entire world was the earwitness to the crushing rebuff of Roosevelt," and added: "After this political execution of Roosevelt by the Fuehrer, one is inclined to ask, 'who would dare to speak today about Roosevelt's message?'

INTERNATIONAL

rer had "been given cause to pause . . . .must be tempered with extreme caution in view of the highly ominous reference to Poland which time may prove to be the most significant part of the whole speech".

The Daily Mirror (Independent)—"We make too much fuss about these speeches. What matters is not what Hitler says or signs but what he does, wha he has done and what he intends to do next. It also matters very much that nobody in his country should be deceived by what Hitler says. His actions are there to cancel his words . . . he says in reference to all peaceful advances "We shall remain skeptically inclined until reality has taught us to know better! So shall we!"

The Daily Mail (Ind.) described the address as "an adroit mixture of injured innocence, self assurance and conciliation with proposals as well as denunciations—gestures as well as sneers."

The newspaper interpreted the speech, however, as leaving the world "more hopeful of peace than it was earlier in the week".

"The lesson of the whole speech as well as of all Herr Hitler's actions is plain enough. Words are to mean plain enough. Words are to mean what he subsequently chooses and to have no relation to what he intended them to convey to others. We believe and trust that lesson has been learned".

The Times (Ind)—"Perhaps the key sentence in Herr Hitler's speech is 'I have therefore taken no step which violated the rights of others'. With that audacious statement he begs every question of the hour. . .

"In a peaceful and progressive world, all things would be possible and Britain for one would be found not unready to share with all other countries, upon reciprocal terms, any peculiar advantage that may accrue to her as colonial power. But in a jungle no such thing is or will be possible."

The News Chronicle (Liberal) said Hitler was trying to drive a wedge between Britain and Poland and added—

"Herr Hitler is adopting towards Poland the same attitude as he took towards Czecho-Slovakia' He is endeavoring to isolate her from the rest of the world so that he can wreak his will by massing his superior strength."

MACDONALD BROS. TO FACE TRIAL

Mickey and Alex Charged With Murder of James Windsor

Toronto, April 29—(CP)— Toronto's first gangland murder comes to trial Monday. An aura of the underworld of bookmaking and banditry surrounds the prosecution of two Toronto brothers—Mickey and Alex MacDonald—for the murder of a bookmaker.

Mickey aged 31, and 19-year-old Alex are accused by the crown of invading Windsor's home with a third man on the night of Jan. 7. There the elder MacDonald is alleged to have drawn a pistol when Windsor "got tough" with him and shot the bookmaker in the abdomen.

The crown further charges that while Windsor lay dying on the floor Mickey MacDonald kicked him and robbed him of valuable jewelry. The brother faces a murder charge in accordance with the "common purpose" section of the Criminal Code which binds all participants in any criminal enterprise and holds them equally guilty of any results that flow from their joint adventure.

True bills already have been returned against the brothers and their trial will open Monday morning with selection of a jury to sit under Mr. Justice G. F. McFarlane.

Third man in the shooting has not been found, but five eye-witnesses declared at the preliminary hearing Mickey MacDonald was the trigger man.

Government Imposed Ban When Cartoon of King and Queen Carried

Ottawa, April 29—(CP)—A ban on the American magazine Ken, imposed April 1 because of a cartoon of the King which was considered undignified, was lifted today by the Department of National Revenue.

Although the exclusion was referred to as "permanent" when it was made, department officials said today publications are never excluded permanently. Publishers always are given the opportunity to submit sample copies and if objectionable features are not carried a request for lifting of the ban is considered.

Copies of the weekly dated May 8 may be admitted into Canada under the new order, making the exclusion one of six weeks.

Large Offering Shoats On Today's Market At $5.50 to $6.00 Each

"Pigs is pigs", no matter at what price, and a squealing symphony that shrilled high above the noises of the city market today would lead one to believe that there was anything but a serious shortage of six-weeks'-old porkers.

The ham, bacon and pork chops of the future were present today in the largest numbers seen in years, according to a veteran marketer.

There were white ones, black ones, red ones and speckled ones, squealing a porcine protest against the stuffy confinement of boxes and crates.

Trucks, cars and other vehicles carrying the pigs lined the sidewalk from the city scales to the Provincial Police office. Other vehicles according to market authorities, unable to obtain parking space, drove away to other markets.

Prices showed little change from quotations of last week. For five dollars and fifty cents you could buy yourself a fine young piglet, and if you demanded a little better quality, it cost you fifty cents more. Up until a late hour, however, business was anything but brisk. These prices, farmers stated, constitute a record for pigs of this age, at this time of the year.

Cameron, K.C., M.P.

Approached by the City Harbor Commission with a view to rehabilitation of the lighthouse, Mr. Cameron placed the request before the Minister of Transport, in the Federal Government.

The request was given due consideration, the communication states and later Mr. Cameron was informed that the department was strongly considering the possibility of doing away with the present lighthouse, and its replacement by the abovementioned light operated by electricity from the shed of the adjacent government wharf.
